New poll showing Clinton beating everyone is reported as bad news for Hillary

Updated by Matthew Yglesias on August 27, 2015, 9:40 a.m. ET @mattyglesias matt@vox.com

<http://www.vox.com/2015/8/27/9214461/clinton-poll-lead>

A new Quinnipiac University poll shows Hillary Clinton coasting to a crushing victory in a three-way race against Bernie Sanders and Joe Biden, winning 45 percent of the vote, compared with 22 for Sanders and 18 for Biden.

And the good news for Clinton doesn't stop there.

The poll shows Clinton beating Jeb Bush head to head.

The poll shows Clinton beating Donald Trump head to head.

The poll shows Clinton winning in a landslide in scenarios where Trump runs as an independent.

The poll did not test Clinton against Scott Walker or other possible nominees.

So how did the media report this poll showing that if the election were held this week Hillary Clinton would win? Well, as bad news for Hillary Clinton!

Bloomberg: "Biden More Competitive Than Clinton Against Leading Republicans: Poll"

Politico: "Poll: Biden outperforms Hillary in general election; Trump leads GOP field"

Time: "Voters open to Joe Biden presidential bid in new poll"

Two things are happening here. One is that "Clinton is still winning" is a boring headline, so there's a tendency to grasp at straws to come up with something else. The other is that the press as a whole doesn't like Clinton very much (and the feeling is mutual), so there's a bias toward believing that the public feels the same way. So somehow her campaign is struggling even when it's winning, and polls that show her winning are reported as showing her losing.

Subject: thought - optics tomorrow night

Just a thought ... in the Miami speech, the diverse crowd behind HRC holding the little American flags was very cool – and at one point, a small U-S-A chant broke out ... Maybe something like this is already in works, but wonder if tomorrow night, we should be more purposeful about generating the U-S-A, U-S-A chants during her riff about the need for togetherness and unity (assuming that's still part of the speech), with people holding the little American flags – since that's what America is really about. Would be a subtle, yet powerful, contrast to the angry white guy U-S-A chants at Trump events when he spews un-American hate talk.

Assessing Vulnerability of Water Conveyance Infrastructure from a Changing Climate in the Context of a Changing Landscape

Please join us for the second webinar in the series, Weathering Change: Local Solutions for Strong Communities, presented by Antioch University New England, in partnership with the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) Region 1 and Region 2.

Thursday, November 13, 2014
12:00 Noon - 1:15 p.m. EDT
AICP Credit Available

Presenter: Michael Simpson, MS, MA, Co-Director, AUNE Center for Climate Preparedness and Community Resilience, and Chair, Department of Environmental Studies

Moderator: Irene Boland Nielson, MPA, Climate Change Coordinator at U.S. EPA

What impact does climate change have on the vulnerability of a community's road crossings and storm water systems? How should communities prepare for increases in run-off events caused by climate change events? How can a community prioritize which road crossings are deemed the most vulnerable?

This webinar will present results from NOAA and U.S. EPA funded research from 2007 through 2013, in the context of rural, the peri-urban, and urban watersheds in New England and the upper Midwest. This research examined the hydrologic impact of climate change and land use scenarios on existing water conveyance infrastructure. The built infrastructure in the watersheds were assessed and mapped in order to generate multiple build-out analyses for the watersheds using current land use regulations. Vulnerable infrastructure was identified and a marginal cost analysis was completed for alternative actions of response.

You can find the first webinar in this series, Resilient Design: Transitioning to the New Built Environment with presenter Alex Wilson, in the Security and Sustainability Forum \(SSF\) Archives.

Participants will learn how these studies informed community resilience that increased stakeholder capacity at the local level in adapting to change.

Hello Hillary,

As you put your team together, in my view the two best Colorado political consultants are Mike Melansen and Alan Salazar. They both were architects of Governor Hickenlooper's recent win, and have huge experience in U.S. Senate and Governor's races, as well as supporting roles in Presidential ones.

Also, you should meet Al Yates-African American, PhD in theoretical physics, former President of Colorado State University, founder of the Democracy Alliance, andthe list goes on. He singlehandedly has in his head the data analytics of the last ten years in Colorado (funded with huge resources) including the explanation of why Mark Udall lost and John Hickenlooper won. I always won Colorado because of him. I would like to arrange a time with him and you/ and your team as we get started.

I know there are many good people in Colorado who would want to help, will help, and are seeking roles or have had roles with you or the President in the past. The three I mention above have no agenda, are smart, humble and effective. In my view, the team you put together in Colorado will be the keystone of your victory here. So please be cautious and on target. I am available to you or your team whenever you want.

All the best,

Ken Salazar

My dear friend and colleague Hilary,

I so enjoyed our meeting today. I am all in because I know you, believe in you, and share your values.

I will help you as much as I can. Specifically, I would offer to (1) host your first fundraiser in Colorado at Hope's and my home (my Mom might even make it if she can); (2) help identify the key elected leaders in Colorado like Representative Crisanta Duran and Mayor Hancock of Denver and host a meeting with you and them; (3) help identify the right political talent in Colorado; and (4) help as needed across the nation.

You are the best. Cesar Chavez prayed "give me the courage to serve others because in service there is true life." You have done so in your words and deeds and I look forward to your next chapter of service.

All the best,

Subject: MUST READ: General Shelton Talks Secretary Clinton, Education, and National Security in Recent Op-ed

The Hill: Early childhood education: Investing in our children and our national security

By U.S. Army Gen. Hugh Shelton (ret.)

October 6, 2014 7:00 a.m. EDT

Hillary Clinton recently said that education “is one of the most valuable assets that the United States has. It’s something that we have to continue to invest in, to protect and indeed to share with the rest of the world.”

The reasons for this are endless, and some are more obvious than others. For example, a more educated workforce earns higher wages, which allows people to rise out of poverty and climb the economic ladder, eventually breaking the oppressive cycle of income inequality. With more money in their pockets, people are able to spend more on goods and services, and this increase in consumer spending grows our economy and creates jobs.

But investing in education is not just beneficial for our economy – it is absolutely critical for our national security.

The correlation between education and national security is often overlooked, not only members of the public, but by our policymakers. That is why I, along with 450 other retired admirals and generals, am a member of a group called Mission Readiness. Mission Readiness was launched in 2009 to inform policymakers that the decisions they make about our children’s education today will have repercussions for our national security well into the future.

Here’s why: 75 percent of the 17-24 year olds in this country are unable to serve in the military due to three main problems: they don’t meet the educational requirements; they have criminal records; or they are too overweight. Nearly one in four high school graduates in America who want to join the Army are unable to because their scores are too low to pass the military’s basic entry exam. And another one-fourth of our young people don’t even make it through high school in time to enlist.

Research shows that early childhood education is the best way to address this national security issue. But no matter what career path our children choose, it is clear that the learning that occurs from cradle to kindergarten will affect their ability to succeed later on.

Unfortunately, too many children today are not receiving the necessary development skills to set them up for success, either because their parents don’t have the resources, the time, the education, etc.

There are two programs in particular that are aimed at making it easier for parents to help their children develop these necessary skills.

The Home Instruction for Parents and Preschool Youngsters (HIPPY) program was founded in Israel to help “teach parents to become their child’s first teachers.” In 1985, Hillary Clinton learned about this innovative program and tracked down the program’s founder and asked her to help bring HIPPY here to the United States. Today, HIPPY has 135 program sites in 21 states and the District of Columbia and serves 15,000 children.

Too Small To Fail focuses on improving early learning for children ages zero to five. At the program’s launch, Hillary Clinton explained why she was so excited about the initiative, stating:

“One of the best investments we can make as a nation is to give our kids the ingredients they need to develop in the first five years of life. We will help bring together the tools that will give children the chance to succeed by the time they’re 5, so that when those kids get to school, they’re able to compete, they are more able to pursue their own dreams.”

Let's join together to help American children pursue their dreams and our nation secure itself for generations to come.

Shelton is a former Special Forces soldier and served as chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff from 1997 to 2001. He served 38 years in the military including his time as Commander in Chief of the United States Special Operations Command. He served two tours of duty in Vietnam.

Gen. Eaton: Dick Cheney Was "Incompetent War Fighter"

Washington, D.C. - Today, National Security Network Senior Adviser Gen. Paul Eaton (Ret.), who served more than 30 years in the United States Army and from 2003-2004 oversaw the training of the Iraqi military, responded to Dick Cheney's Afghanistan accusations from last night:

"The record is clear: Dick Cheney and the Bush administration were incompetent war fighters. They ignored Afghanistan for 7 years with a crude approach to counter-insurgency warfare best illustrated by: 1. Deny it. 2. Ignore it. 3. Bomb it. While our intelligence agencies called the region the greatest threat to America, the Bush White House under-resourced our military efforts, shifted attention to Iraq, and failed to bring to justice the masterminds of September 11.

"The only time Cheney and his cabal of foreign policy 'experts' have anything to say is when they feel compelled to protect this failed legacy. While President Obama is tasked with cleaning up the considerable mess they left behind, they continue to defend torture or rewrite a legacy of indifference on Afghanistan. Simply put, Mr. Cheney sees history throughout extremely myopic and partisan eyes.

"As one deeply invested in the Armed Forces of this country, I am grateful for the senior military commanders assigned to leading this fight and the men and women fighting on the ground. But I dismiss men like Cheney who inject partisan politics into the profound deliberations our Commander-in-Chief and commanders on the ground are having to develop a cohesive and comprehensive strategy, bringing to bear the economic and diplomatic as well as the military power, for Afghanistan—something Bush, Cheney and Rumsfeld never did.

"No human endeavor can be as profound as sending a nation's youth to war. I am very happy to see serious men and women working hard to get it right."

Subject: State of the Race, 100 Days Out

To: Volunteers and Supporters

From: Robby Mook

Date: October 27, 2015

Hillary Clinton said on the first day of this campaign that we would need to work hard to earn every vote in every state to win the Democratic nomination. Hillary has spent the last six months listening to voters across the country and offering detailed solutions that will make a real difference for families, like raising their wages and helping to pay for college. Meanwhile, you and 73,984 other volunteers have built a campaign organization capable of securing the Democratic nomination, regardless of how long the process takes. In every state and territory, volunteers are talking to friends and neighbors about why Hillary is the tenacious fighter middle class voters need to help them get ahead.

We started with a plan and stuck to it. We were determined to focus on, and measure our progress against, the metrics that matter most: recruiting and training enough volunteers to turn our supporters out to vote; raising the resources to organize and communicate; and getting our message out. The result is a strong, durable campaign that is well positioned to capture a winning number of primary delegates and enter the general election ready to motivate millions of voters to make Hillary our 45th president.

No candidate in this race has faced greater headwinds, or more scrutiny than Hillary Clinton. Yet, she stands better positioned today to win the primary and general election than any other candidate. This is a testament to Hillary's determination and your hard work. It's also proof that Hillary's message of fighting for families is resonating with voters nationwide.

Emerging from October in a Stronger Position

The pundits were right: October was a critical month for Hillary and our campaign. Hillary faced some key tests: the first debate, the partisan hearing on Benghazi and the JJ Dinner in Iowa. Skeptics and supporters alike agree: Hillary passed every test with flying colors.

- Debate. In the first Democratic debate, Hillary won not only in the headlines (Politico: "Hillary Crushes It"), but also with voters by showing that she is the only candidate with the tenacity and vision to even the odds for families. The vast majority of polls showed her winning the debate with voters by a 2:1 margin.
- Benghazi Hearing. Kevin McCarthy told the truth: Republicans established the Benghazi committee to hurt Hillary in the polls. They spent more than $4 million in taxpayer money doing it. Despite having already testified before multiple Senate and House congressional committees examining the issue, Hillary wanted to honor the service of the four Americans killed in the line of duty and contribute in any way she could to learning important lessons for the future. She spent 11 hours diligently answering all of the Select Committee's questions. Reporters and pundits overwhelmingly agreed that she emerged from the hearing looking prepared, poised, and presidential.
- JJ Dinner. The JJ Dinner wasn't just a test of Hillary's message, it was also a test of her organizational strength. It was an opportunity for the campaign to showcase how the investments we've made in building a volunteer infrastructure will help us to win the Iowa caucuses. Multiple news reports highlighted how Hillary's pre-dinner rally was by far the largest of any candidate, and her organizing advantage continued at the dinner itself. As CBS News reported "it was a spectacle that projected the strength of her campaign's organization, which was unmatched by the other campaigns in the room Saturday night."

Building a Winning Organization

We said at the beginning of this campaign that we needed to raise $100 million this year to make early, strategic investments in data, technology, and personnel to build a winning organization. We are well on track to meet this goal and, despite making significant investments, we still have significantly more cash on hand than any other campaign and three times as much as Jeb Bush.

We are on track to meet our $100 million goal, largely because of our grassroots donors. Hillary for America has built one of the largest donors bases of any candidate, larger than the Obama campaign had at roughly the same point in 2007. Our average donation is small (92% of our donations were $100 or less) and our donor base is making history: more than 60% of our donors are women.

Investment: Mobilization

No campaign—on either side—has made a bigger investment in grassroots organizing than Hillary for America. We have hundreds of organizers in key states and 33 offices in the early states alone. Our goal has been to build a field operation that can compete everywhere—including deep into the primary—and win close races. We continue to have the largest organizing presence in Iowa and New Hampshire and, until September, we were the only Democratic campaign operating in Nevada. We have been active in every other state and territory since April, with a special focus on March states, when almost 60% of the delegates will be chosen. Other campaigns are unlikely to have the time or resources to catch up.

It is also worth remembering that these early investments matter for the general election, too: three of the four early states are likely to be contested next November. Most Republicans are foregoing the ground game completely and instead relying on television advertising from Super PACs to buoy their campaigns. As a point of comparison, with a total of 38 organizers and 8 offices, Jeb boasts the largest organization of any Republican candidate in the early states—a small fraction of the organization we've built.

Investment: Communicating with Voters

We made a strategic decision to be up on TV earlier and at higher levels than anyone else. This has allowed us to communicate our message before the airwaves get cluttered and at lower rates. Bernie Sanders' chief strategist has acknowledged that this decision is paying dividends for us.

Similarly, the investments in data and analytics gives us an edge now in helping us identify and target voters that are receptive to our message. This also means that all of our communication—at the door, in the mail, on TV, etc.—will be more efficient and will save the campaign money in the long run.

Investment: Political Outreach

In keeping with our strategy to fight for every single vote, we have made it a priority to engage voters directly, as well as seek support among institutions, elected officials, community leaders and superdelegates.

Unions

With AFSCME's endorsement on Friday, we have the support of 10 national labor unions, including AFT and NEA, which constitute a nationwide network of teachers in virtually every state and county in the country. Collectively, these unions represent more than 8 million voters. We also now have support from more than a third of the AFL-CIO's member unions. Since an endorsement from the AFL-CIO requires a two-thirds vote, Hillary Clinton is effectively the only candidate positioned to seek a federation endorsement.

Leadership Councils

Hillary for America has built Leadership Councils in seven states that vote in early March: Colorado, Georgia, Maine, Minnesota, Oklahoma, Tennessee and Virginia. These councils are comprised of elected officials, community, coalition and grassroots leaders. These leaders will amplify the campaign's message and outreach, helping to build the organization through grassroots events, volunteer recruitment and Get Out the Vote/Caucus activities. More councils will be announced in the coming weeks.

Last week, more than 50 African American mayors endorsed Hillary. The mayors represent a range of large and small cities across the country and will be joined in the coming days by additional mayors from across the country.

Superdelegates

There are 712 total superdelegates in the Democratic nomination process and Hillary has enjoyed historical levels of support from them. Today, Hillary has more support from superdelegates than all the pledged delegates awarded in Iowa, New Hampshire, Nevada, South Carolina, and a third of delegates awarded on Super Tuesday combined.

Polling

In addition to our organizational and political strength, no candidate stands in a better position with the actual voters who will decide the election. According to public polls (pollster.com):

- Hillary's favorability with Democratic voters has remained sky high (close to 80%). In fact, she has a higher favorability rating among primary voters than any Democratic candidate, and any Republican candidate does with Republican primary voters.
- On average, she has a strong double-digit lead of 25 points in national polling—more than double her closest opponent.

Of course, we are the first campaign to acknowledge that the primary is not a national election but a series of state races. Hillary is also strong at the state level:

- In Iowa, Hillary has an average lead of nearly 10 points.
- In New Hampshire, public polls since the presidential debate show a tight race including three recent polls that have her leading.
- In Nevada, South Carolina, and the key March states, Hillary enjoys strong double-digit leads. Here are just a few examples from those critical states:
  - FL: +39
  - GA: +36
  - MA: +34
  - MI: +13
  - NC: +35
  - NV: +26
  - OH: +19
  - SC: +27
  - TX: +12
  - VA: +17

Underscoring her strength as a candidate, Hillary has tremendous leads of between 30-40 point with three key groups: women, African-Americans and Latinos. These voters will not only be decisive in the primary, but will also play a critical role in determining the president next November.

More Challenges Ahead

Although we are proud that Hillary is in such a strong position today, we have said from the beginning that becoming the first female nominee of a major party would not be easy. We recognize there are challenges ahead as we seek to earn every caucus goer and vote.

The Koch Brothers alone have committed almost a billion dollars to tear down Hillary Clinton and we will continue to depend on our grassroots supporters to provide us with the resources we need to compete. We started this campaign with millions fewer emails than President Obama had during his 2012 re-elect, the first presidential campaign in the Super PAC era. We will continue to aggressively organize online to build an unprecedented grassroots list that can help us fight back against the Super PACs.

But our campaign and our candidate have withstood a significant early test and have emerged in a strong position to win. Just as she did over the summer, Hillary Clinton will remain focused on the families she's fighting for, and her campaign will remain focused on building the kind of organization it takes to win.

Fortune: "Hillary Clinton spurs 'gender data revolution'"

By Caroline Fairchild

December 15, 2014, 3:03 p.m. EST

[Subtitle:] Through Data2x, Clinton unveiled new partnerships to improve data collection and help address gender issues around the world.

There's not much news in Hillary Clinton getting on a stage to champion women and girls. The former First Lady turned former Secretary of State turned rumored presidential candidate has made the economic progress of women a priority throughout her career. Yet after years of finding her efforts being met with mostly indifference, Clinton is perfecting her approach.

On Monday, Clinton announced six new partnerships with global organizations to power a "gender data revolution." Data2X, an initiative announced by Clinton in 2012, is working to use data to advance gender equality and women's empowerment. An initiative led by the United Nations Foundation with support from the William and Flora Hewlett Foundation, the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation and the Clinton Foundation, Data2x provides a platform for global leaders to foster greater collaboration on the topic of gender data in global development. Gender data around the world on key topics remains limited, and Data2x is focused on creating partnership that will create a full picture of the lives of women and girls. Moreover, without the right data, Clinton feels that you can't make the case for why public policies around the world need to change.

"I got tired of seeing otherwise thoughtful people smile and nod when I raised these issues [women and girls]," said Clinton at an event at Bloomberg Philanthropies in New York. "Foreign leaders, business executives, even senior officials in our own government. You can just see the wheels turning, like, 'Oh right, I knew she was going to raise women and girls. I will just smile, it will pass and then we'll talk about really important things.' Over and over again this was an experience I had."

Data2x has identified 28 gaps in data on women across health, education, economic opportunities, political participation and human security. Several years ago in India, for example, only 6% of women were officially counted as employed. After further research, it was discovered that women do six hours of unpaid work on average outside of the traditional economy every day. If leaders in India brought these women into the paid economy at the same level as men, the country's GDP would increase by $1.7 trillion.

This, says Clinton, is just one of countless ways that the numbers can support a case for a shift in how leaders are addressing the issues. The International Labour Organization, the World Bank and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations are working specifically to help implement news definitions of work and employment with problems like the one in India in mind.

"If you don't measure, you can't manage. You can't understand what the problem is," said Clinton. "It's not enough any longer to make the case on moral rights grounds... We are not making the progress we should be if that is the principle, and in sometimes exclusive, argument that we are making."

Other new partnerships through Data2x include an effort to get more women access to financial services. There is an estimated $300 billion credit shortage for women-owned companies in emerging economies, and the Global Banking Alliance for Women along with the International American Development Bank are collaborating to provide sex-disaggregated data by banks around the world.

Clinton announced the news partnerships along with former New York City Mayor Michael Bloomberg, United Nations Foundation President and CEO Kathy Calvin, and her daughter Chelsea Clinton. Prior to addressing the crowd, Bloomberg shared that a few years ago Bloomberg Philanthropies started working to address maternal deaths in Tanzania. Suffering from one of the highest maternal death rates in the world,

Bloomberg dove into the numbers and discovered that there is one doctor for every 50,000 people. Upgrading health facilities and training non-physicians to provide emergency care create more opportunities for Tanzanian women to get the care they need.

“There are so many other opportunities to improve lives that the world is not effectively tracking because we don’t have that data,” he said. “If you get the data, you can really target your resources and make a big difference.”

Subject: [blog-cabal] Media Monitoring Report - Morning 06/25/08

Main Topics: Rick Davis on Charlie Black, McCain & Evangelicals/Conservatives

Summary of Shift: Not a lot of McCain coverage overall this morning. Highlights pertaining to McCain include Rick Davis speaking on Charlie Black not going anywhere, and some coverage of his energy plan campaign. Other McCain highlights were a piece relating to religion, and local Los Angeles coverage of McCain's energy speeches in the area. The main topics overall included Obama assisting Hillary Clinton with her campaign debt, the shooting by a worker in a plant in Kentucky, the wildfires in California, and the U.S. Supreme Court's ruling rejecting the idea of the death penalty for child rape.

Highlight #1

Davis: Charlie Black not Going Anywhere (MSNBC 06/24/08 7:50am)

SCARBOROUGH: I'm not much of a numbers guy but these numbers don't look good . . . Newsweek has Obama up by 15, LA Times, Obama up by 12. ABC/Washington Post up by six, ABC/Gallup up by six. What's going on and how does your guy catch up?

RICK DAVIS: . . . look, we've got work to do. It's early. Feel very good about the fact we're well positioned with voters . . . I feel very bullish about it.

DAVIS: No question there's a challenge for our campaign with the challenges that are out there economically with the American public. I think John McCain has talked a lot about the fact we need to have immediate action for the American people. That's why he offered up before the holiday season started this summer a gas tax holiday. Obama opposed it. . .

SCARBOROUGH: Almost every economist disagrees with that. I'm not so sure that working class voters agree with the economists. Let me ask you about the other two issues. War in Iraq. The polls seem split right now. On terrorism John McCain up 19 percentage points. Was Charlie black right if a terror attack hits US soil between now and the election? That it will be positive for the McCain campaign?

DAVIS: No, Charlie is wrong in his comments and Senator McCain said so the other day and I'm sure Charlie regrets them and—

SCARBOROUGH: Is Charlie going to come out and apologize?

DAVIS: Joe, the bottom line is, the American people have figured out that the guy who is best able to serve his commander in chief the first day he's elected to president is John McCain. The fact they recognize that is a huge step forward for our campaign. It gives us an opportunity to have a dialogue on them out of some kind of level of knowledge and respect that the American people are showing the senator in this regard. It's a very positive thing. It's good. We would never extrapolate that into the kind of discussion you're talking about.

SCARBOROUGH: Rick, Charlie has apologized. Has senator McCain accepted the apology and will he be staying with the campaign?

DAVIS: Sure. Charlie is not going anywhere. The senator understands that all of us make mistakes in the course of a campaign. It wouldn't be a campaign if that didn't happen.

Highlight #2

McCain's Failures To Rally Conservatives and Evangelicals Around His Campaign Examined (FNC, 06/25/08, 7:20am)

GRETCHEN CARLSON: Alright. If John McCain isn't actively pursuing the evangelical vote, what about the conservative vote? Can you parse that away from evangelicals?

MARGERET HOOVER: Absolutely! This is a really good point, and I'm so glad you brought this up. Conservatives, traditionally we thought of conservatives as the three-legged stool. Economic, social conservatives, and national security conservatives. That was Reagan's coalition. We have made the mistake, now a days, trying to pull that coalition still together, when they are really very separate groups that believe different things. John McCain is going after economic conservatives, national security conservatives. He is not reaching out, or trying to get social conservatives , like James Dobson, to vote for him. And James Dobson has said, he's not going to.

CARLSON: You believe John, that McCain has shored up the conservative base in the GOP.

JOHN AVLON: Polls show that John McCain has done a very good job of uniting his party around him. Folks who said, as a matter of principle, never support John McCain, most of those folks are falling into line. And so I think McCain deserves a lot of credit for uniting the republican party around his candidacy, because they understand that John McCain is the single best hope republicans have for holding onto the White House. And it's because of his independence, not in spite of it. His brand of patriotism, political reform, fiscal discipline, and national security, that's things that republicans should look forward to.

CARLSON: And yet, a new poll shows that only 58% of the conservative base is rallying around John McCain. So it remains to be see whether they will actually show up in November.

HOOVER: Lot's of work to do. Definitely lots of work to do.

Highlight #3

McCain is the "Comfortable Shoe," Election Will be a Referendum on Obama (MSNBC 06/24/08 8:39am)

JOE SCARBOROUGH: Not looking good . . . how does John McCain claw his way back into this race?

CHUCK TODD: Well look, I think you do it by making this a referendum on Barack Obama. I think that that's their intent. I think that that's what this campaign is going to be about. . . it's always going to be a question about Obama. I think that's what McCain wants this to be. McCain's going to be kind of the comfortable shoe. The safety net . . . if you're just not comfortable enough with Obama you'll be just comfortable enough with McCain . . .

Letterman: "Grandpa's Losing It" (CBS 06/24/08 11:44pm)

NARRATOR: Yesterday, John McCain offered $300 million to anyone who developed an environmentally friendly car battery. Sadly, there is no such offer. You see, the Senator is a very old man who is getting by on little to no sleep. When he gets tired, he says crazy things. This morning he offered m $500 million to get his glasses. John McCain: Grandpa's Losing It.

Local News Highlights McCain Embarrassments Over Lobbyists and Charlie Black Comments (LA-KNBC-4, 06/24/08, 6:48pm)

STEVE HANDELSMAN: [...] This is just the latest in a string of staff embarrassments for McCain, who's had to let go staff who turned out to be lobbying on the side. But Charlie Black might survive, in part, because he's so very very close personally with McCain. And in part, because so many people in the political world believe what Charlie Black said is actually true. Whatever John McCain said about what Charlie Black said. [...]

Thx, Mickey

The program provides those most in need a chance to succeed in school and in life. It's a great example of an innovative public/private partnership enabled by the ACA and it's great TV. Hard not to smile when watching the Secretary putting glasses on an elementary school kid who is seeing the world clearly for the first time. And it's a safe way into education as we've the support of both teachers unions (pres of CTA is on our board) and reformers (Broad Foundation is a donor).

Might provide the networks with some good footage beyond the fog of trying to cover caucus goers.

John-vision to learn is a program to provide access to eye doctors and -when needed - glasses to first-third and fifth graders, we are now operating in 4 states just after 2.5 years. We have screened over 250 thousand kids and provided over 35 thousand pairs of glasses. Iowa is the latest state we have entered. We are beginning to operate in dubuque. We will have a formal inauguration between jan 25 and jan 29. We would set the date consistent with hillary's schedule. In almost all cases we have a bus that visits a school with the appropriate medical personnel to screen the kids --and for those needing glasses we provide them usually within two weeks, by the way we give them a choice of frames from about 100 examples. Its a perfect fit for hillary and the vtl program in iowa. I serve as co-chair with austin beutner(its his idea and initiative-he's the former publisher of the i.a times) and ann hollister is the executive director. Is there someone ann could talk with to see if this works? Please let me know and happy holidays to you and your family--mickey

Hi Mickey, We can do an event in Debuque with Hillary anytime between Jan 20th and Jan 29th. Kids will be screened and glasses will be in hand and ready to be distributed. Now that we have this nailed down does it make sense to follow up with any of the campaign staff? Thanks, Ann

Subject: Follow-up to Question re UnitedHealthcare and Implications

Attachments: HRC Campaign Memo re United-ACA status.11.23.15.docx

John: Following up on your call last night, I tried to quickly pull together the attached semi-comprehensive, but hopefully easy to read backgrounder on the UnitedHealthcare situation and the broader dynamics/implications/questions that are raised around it. I present the conflicting issues around plan positioning, enrollment and risk selection. I think you will find it to be consistent with our conversation. You will note that besides raising the issues, I make a recommendation about HRC being a bit more aggressive about the need to strengthen the ACA over time. I also raise a few very preliminary new policy outlines that may spur further conversations with Ann, Jake and the rest of the team. Hope helpful for you all.

Joyce,Ginger, Sean , Mike, Barbara,

First of all, we are honored to have the national NEA endorsement of Hillary for President. The Secretary will be with us for her last visit to New Jersey prior to the Iowa and New Hampshire primaries. The Chairman and our N.J. FINANCE COMMITTEE are most appreciative of the NJEA being a part of our 10/27 event at Phil Sellinger's home. We need to send our message nationwide that New Jersey is playing a major role in electing Secretary Hillary Clinton as our next President of the United States. Thank you all for the great work that you do for our children and making New Jersey number 1 in Education. Best,
John.

Our economic recovery has been everywhere but in family paychecks for tens of millions of Americans. Working Americans have a right to be frustrated because they see only a small portion of the country riding the economy's up escalator; more of us deserve to get on. Americans are working harder than ever, more than ever, and earning less than they once did. The answer to closing this opportunity gap is smaller government, lower taxes, and less government involvement so our innovators and our small businesses can get operating again.

<http://thinkprogress.org/2009/11/05/david-koch-astroturf/>

Americans for Prosperity (AFP), the corporate front group founded in the 1980s by Koch Industries billionaire David Koch, worked closely with Rep. Michele Bachmann (R-MN) to orchestrate the anti-health reform rally today. As ThinkProgress reported yesterday, AFP has been encouraging right-wing activists to board their buses — free of charge — to attend the rally. While AFP does not disclose all of its corporate donors, foundations controlled by David and Charles Koch provide millions in yearly funding, and David continues to chair the AFP foundation and preside over AFP's annual convention.

ThinkProgress found at least a dozen AFP staffers standing at their designated bus drop off point near the Capitol, handing out signs, directions, talking points, petitions, and donuts to protesters. Many of the people who work at AFP are longtime Republican operatives, like Ben Marchi, the AFP Virginia director who previously worked for the National Republican Congressional Committee and for Rep. Tom Delay (R-TX). Victor Zapanta produced this video report of AFP staffers talking about their exploits at the rally today:

AFP STAFFERS: We have 25 buses just from Pennsylvania, New Jersey we probably have 5 or 6 from Maryland.

AFP STAFFERS: We have about 40 buses coming.

Watch it:

David Koch's AFP has a long history of marshaling "grassroots" support for GOP objectives. In the early 1990s, AFP, then known as Citizens for a Sound Economy, worked secretly with then-Rep. Newt Gingrich (R-GA) to organize angry crowds following the Clintons as they touted their health reform bill. Industry money from health insurance, telecommunications, oil, and other companies has flowed freely to AFP over the years to help AFP promote an agenda of boosting the rich, stripping consumer safeguards, and maintaining corporate monopolies. Phillip Morris rented out AFP from the Koch family, contributing millions to the organization in exchange for AFP to build opposition to tobacco regulations.

AFP's daily activities are managed by Tim Phillips, an infamous astroturf lobbyist who built a career using Christian front groups to wage stealth campaigns. For example, his work includes fighting under the radar to promote energy deregulation for Enron and helping Jack Abramoff clients continue forced abortion sweatshops in the Northern Mariana Islands.

Will the media report on the true driver of today's rally? Or will they leave David Koch out of the equation, despite his hand-in-glove involvement.

Document attached, 2016 highlights below:

Fox News' Fox and Friends: Donald Trump will be in Laredo, TX today; Trump will also meet with law enforcement officials and hold a town hall meeting; anchors reported that another congressional hearing will be held today, this time concerning sanctuary cities; Hasselbeck criticized liberals for lacking compassion and common sense; Hasselbeck reported Nancy Pelosi is calling Kate's Law "Trump's Law"; Clayton said Democrats are trying to politicize the issue and spin it as an attack against Trump; played a clip of Brad Steinle praising Trump for calling his family, but said Kate's Law is not Trump's law, it's common sense; Doocy said it was disgusting how Pelosi was trying to smear Trump and Republicans; Doocy said it is universally accepted that the San Francisco sheriff blew it. Segment about the Senate Judiciary hearing from yesterday; a woman whose son was killed by an illegal immigrants said Trump was an advocate for people like her, and she expressed her strong support for him; the woman called Trump her hero. A new Fox News poll shows Americans are not happy with the economy; Clayton said HRC has to answer for the poor economic recovery as well, because she was part of the Obama Administration; Varney said HRC could not separate herself from Obama's poor handling of the economy because she was Secretary of State for four years while he was President; Varney said HRC is closely tied to the Obama Administration's failures; Doocy and Varney said the only way to fix the economy is grow the wages of the middle class.

MSNBC's Morning Joe: Trump is visiting a Texas border town today. Trump accused Perry of failing to secure America's southern border and Perry struck back at Trump's "toxic mix of demagoguery." For Perry, this is a good opportunity to get on the news and set himself apart as Trump's alternative. Perry channeled military service in his attack against Trump. Also said it was a little much calling him a cancer and his tone was aggressive. Bill Kristol said he's always thought Trump would run as a third party candidate. HRC will be in South Carolina today campaigning on the economy. Polls yesterday showed her unfavorable in swing states Iowa, Virginia, and Colorado. The campaign says the current sample versus the exit polls in the last presidential election show models that are far less favorable for Democrats. Bill Kristol said he would be worried if he were HRC's campaign. Joe Scarborough says he doesn't know what she can do in the coming months to turn it around. He also said HRC loves Trump because it would be the summer of Sanders and HRC not gaining traction if he wasn't sucking up all the media coverage. Lanhee Chen said HRC's biggest underlying problem is that people don't trust her and HRC is trying to get left but there's no space over there (left on trade, left on taxes) but HRC is in trouble regardless of Trump. Willie Geist said Republicans should be encouraged that there is nothing inevitable about HRC. Bill Kristol said Trump has tapped into people that don't want the same old politician and that's bad news for HRC. Bill Clinton and George W. Bush on the cover of TIME. On HRC, Bill said that the first three times he asked her to marry him she said no and told her to run for office and HRC said she's too aggressive and no one would vote for her. Part of Bush/Clinton relationship was because of the note 41 left to 42. They do speaking gigs together and they make fun of each other and call each other out. It's a fascinating relationship because the pair could be the husband or the brother of the next president.

CNN's New Day: Trump threatens third party run if he feels that the RNC will not be fair to him during the primary season. Trump also going to visit the US-Mexico border. Chris Cuomo states that polls show that Trump would take a bigger chunk of Jeb Bush's votes than Hillary Clinton's if he ran as a third party candidate. Dana Bash states that Republicans are afraid of the "Ross Perot scenario." RNC put out a statement that criticized Trump and his threat to a third party run is born from those statements. Trump is visiting the US-Mexico border because the head of the local border patrol union has been active in asking candidates to come to the border. Trump on Anderson Cooper says that he doesn't like to make a lot of mistakes and states, "why do you have to repent, why do you have to ask for forgiveness if you're not making mistakes?" Margaret Hoover, Republican Consultant, claims that the difference between Ross Perot and Donald Trump is that Perot stood for something: balancing the budget and fiscal responsibility, but Trump just stands against all the other Republican candidates. John Avlon states that Ross Perot ran as a very centrist third party candidate which is very different from Trump's far right candidacy. Alisyn Camerota states that she has spoken to voters who truly believe Trump will make America great again and that he embodies the American success story. Reuters "Fantasy Poll" of

Subject: Report from the Hill

It appears that the IC IG (not State IG) has sent a notification to Congress (maybe only to HPSCI—unclear) describing the work the IC IG has been doing recently (unclear if a general report or one only focusing on 55,000 pages). As to the HRC emails, the report explicitly states that none of those emails bore classification or dissemination-limitation markings. It goes on to say that its own IC IG review of the 55,000 pages determined that at least 4 of these emails should have been classified “secret” on account of them containing IC information subject to such classification and that a thumb drive containing these emails is presently in the possession of David Kendall (that would be me) at Williams & Connolly. The matter has been referred to counterintelligence officials at State and the IC (National Counterterrorism & Security Center) and the FBI.

This appears to be the only reference to a “referral” in the notification.

This is a very common tactic of theirs. Whenever the rhetoric, and sometimes even actual events like vandalism or worse, gets so overheated on their side that the media starts to notice, Republicans start to say that both sides are equally at fault and make up phony examples. They did this in the 2008 campaign a lot because of all the ugly things being said coming from the crowds showing up at Republican rallies.

Since the House passed health care reform on Sunday, Democratic lawmakers who voted for the bill have received death threats and been victims of vandalism. While some Republicans have condemned these incidents, Sarah Palin seemed to fan the flames of discontent by labeling a map of vulnerable lawmakers' districts with crosshairs on her Facebook page and tweeting, "Commonsense Conservatives & lovers of America: 'Don't Retreat, Instead – RELOAD!'" This morning, NBC's Ann Curry asked Sen. John McCain (R-AZ) if he believed his former running mate should use less "incendiary" language. McCain condemned any violence but excused Palin's "reload" rhetoric and use of crosshairs. Today on Capitol Hill, ThinkProgress caught up with Rep. Pete Olson (R-TX), who said that Palin's reload map is "inappropriate":

TP: Speaking of gun shots, would you consider Palin telling her supporters they need to "reload," and posting a picture of crosshairs on Democratic members — is that inappropriate?

OLSON: There's things, both parties are inappropriate.

TP: Is that inappropriate, yes or no?

OLSON: No I'm not going to answer the question.

TP: So it is appropriate.

OLSON: It is inappropriate.

Watch it:

While Olson continually claimed that both Democratic and Republican lawmakers have incited violence, he could not point to a single example of Democrats doing so.

[Media Advisory] Vote to End Hunger Campaign Launch

Des Moines, Iowa, October 9, 2015 – Top national nonprofits are gathering during World Food Prize week at the Iowa Hunger Summit on October 13 to announce the official launch of a new campaign, Vote to End Hunger (VTEH). The campaign will mobilize grassroots supporters and influencers to urge 2016 presidential candidates to focus on ending hunger and poverty, and creating opportunity in the United States and across the world.

Hunger is a significant but solvable problem, both in the United States and internationally, but it requires leadership and a commitment from our president and Congress. One out of every seven U.S. households – more than 48 million Americans – struggles to put food on the table. These numbers include 5.4 million seniors and 15 million children. Around the world, 795 million people experience hunger every day.

Following the official launch of VTEH, representatives will hold a press conference to answer questions and provide more information about the campaign.

It was great to meet you last Wednesday in New York. I am really grateful for taking your valuable time to meet me. I understand how busy you are.

As I mentioned, we are celebrating the 20th anniversary of the reestablishment of Tsinghua Law School. Because of our close ties with the US, I sincerely hope President Clinton may send a letter to make some comments on the achievements we have made in the past 20 years, if possible. The letter attached provides some background information. Should you need any further information please let me know.

Subject: Post-2015 session

Georgios, it was good speaking with you - thanks for reaching out. Copied are John and the team at CGI, led by Ed Hughes, who together are helping brainstorm on a post-2015 discussion during CGI.

Team, below is a note on a similar session that Georgios and his team are preparing for September.

We discussed whether / how it makes sense to cross-pollinate or combine - and wanted to connect everyone via this note to continue this discussion.

Sincerely,
Ami

Concept note for a possible event in New York, on the sidelines of the 68th session of the UN General Assembly/General Debate Suggested title: Sustainability: A Guiding Vision for the Future?

Suggested date: Monday, 23 September 2013, 5 - 7 pm

Suggested co-organizers: CUNY Graduate Center/The Ralph Bunche Institute, Foundation for Global Governance and Sustainability [and the Permanent Mission of Finland to the United Nations]

Suggested venue: CUNY Graduate Center [or Permanent Mission of Finland to the United Nations]

Background and objectives:

A few months before the Rio+20 Conference the UN Secretary-General's High-level Panel on Global Sustainability came up with a vision and a set of concrete proposals for taking the world in a more sustainable direction (see Resilient People, Resilient Planet: A Future Worth Choosing). Many of the issues brought up in the Panel's report were reflected in the Rio+20 outcome (The Future We Want), including the need to go beyond Gross National Product (GDP) for the measurement of progress and human well-being, and to introduce Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) for the post-MDG/post-2015 period. Other issues are being followed up in different fora (e.g. science-policy interface under UNESCO leadership). A number of processes set in motion by Rio are expected to deliver concrete results in these areas in the coming years. Moreover, the Secretary-General's High-level Panel of Eminent Persons on the Post-2015 Development Agenda submitted at the end of May 2013 its report (see A New Global Partnership: Eradicate Poverty and Transform Economies Through Sustainable Development) proposing five big, transformative shifts and a list of 12 illustrative SDGs. The Secretary-General is expected to submit to the 68th session of the General Assembly his own report on post-2015.

The proposed event will bring together members of the two UNSG Panels, plus members of the intergovernmental processes set up by Rio+20, as well as participants from academia and civil society in order to:

- Reinforce the messages of the two panels to ensure that they are heard in the relevant ongoing processes;
- Highlight some of the recommendations of either of these panels that are not yet being followed-up to encourage their implementation;

To consider the importance of sustainability as a guiding vision for the UN's work in development for years to come. Complete with concrete sustainability goals and policy options, this could become the unifying paradigm needed to direct action at the global and all other governance levels and increase resilience vis-à-vis the interconnected challenges facing the world.

Suggested programme:

- Introductory remarks by host/co-organizers [the co-organizers will share the tasks of introducing, moderating and closing the session]
- The GSP vision and key recommendations [President Halonen?]
- The Post-2015 Panel vision and key recommendations [President of Indonesia or Liberia?]
- The Secretary-General's approach [Amina Mohammed (Special Adviser to UNSG)?]
- Respondents
  - *Co-Facilitator of OWG on SDGs [Hungary or Kenya Ambassador or Minister?]
  - *High-level Political Forum (former) Co-Facilitator? [Brazil or Italy Ambassador or Minister?]
  - *A view from civil society [Beyond 2015 Executive Committee member?]
  - *A view from academia/science [Tom Weiss?]
- Closing remarks

Suggested invitees:

GSP and Post-2015 Panel members and Sherpas; member states; NGO community [through UN-NGLS?]; CUNY/Ralph Bunche IIS list; UN secretariat staff; academics [also through ACUNS?]

XXX-

Hope you are well. We are in the process of setting up policy working groups for the campaign as a way to get policy recommendations from outside advisors. I am writing to see if you would consider being one of our senior partners in the YY Y working group along with AAA [insert name(s) of other senior partners for the working group].

The role of a senior partner is to provide strategic leadership for the working group and to amplify campaign policy proposals. I've included some more details below along with a summary of the working groups.

I've copied Ed Meier, our Director of Policy Outreach, and Jed Herrmann, who is coordinating the domestic policy working groups. They can provide more details. If you're available on Wednesday, there will be a kick-off call for coordinators and senior partners at 1pm EST. If you are available for the call, you can register HERE .

Thanks,

John

Policy Working Groups and Senior Partner's Role

Senior partners will work with a coordinator (a mid career professional who has a high level of expertise in the policy area) to lead a large group of outside advisors in developing specific policy proposals for the campaign. These senior partners will also work with the coordinator to plan for and participate in the monthly working group call. In sum, senior partners will serve as a go-to person for the HFA policy team.

The key objectives for the policy working groups are to:

- Bring a diverse range of policy expertise and ideas as part of the campaign's policy development process
- Research, analyze, and draft policy proposals for consideration by the campaign and provide issues-based rapid response
- Identify opportunities to highlight and amplify Hillary Clinton's vision for America with key stakeholders around the country
- Motivate working group members to contribute their time and efforts to other areas of the campaign

Hi everyone,

Below is a message from the Equal Justice Foundation about their silent auction, which is happening now! If you have any questions, please email ejf@law.georgetown.edu .

Barb

Dear Faculty/Staff,

As most of you know, the Equal Justice Foundation raises funds to support students working in unpaid public interest and government summer internships. Our annual Live Auction, the largest fundraiser of the year, will take place next Thursday in Hart Auditorium. As always we also have a Silent Auction component where participants can bid on items like restaurant gift certificates, hotel stays, and wine tastings donated by local businesses.

This year for the first time the Silent Auction is online. We are excited that this will allow staff, faculty, alumni and students to bid from anywhere at any time.

The Silent Auction is available at <http://www.32auctions.com/EJF2015> . The auction is now live, and closes next Thursday, January 29, at 7:00p.m. Bid early and often!

Thank you for your continued support.

Brian Deese asked whether either you or WJC wanted a quick telephone briefing on the rule which I think landed really well for the country and for the way we positioned last week's announcement. He may have already reached out directly. They appreciate our support and are hoping for something from President Clinton too, given the big push on efficiency as a way to earn early action credits. Hi John,

How are you? I'm looking forward to seeing you at Kristina's party tonight. I've heard from her and from Eryn that you're having the time of your life over there on Pennsylvania Ave. I'm looking forward to coming to visit you all sometime soon!

I've also been having a really incredible time in my new position. I'm doing all of Neera's speechwriting, helping manage the upcoming White House Summit on Women and Girls, and I have a huge amount of responsibility over the daily routine in the executive office. My new position is much more like Kristina's job on your team than mine. As I probably should have guessed I'm doing a lot more work for Neera than I am for Carmel. She's a tough boss, NT, but I think we've established a very solid relationship.

I'm not sure if you've heard the news yet, but Jess O'Connell is headed over to EMILY's list, where she'll be replacing Amy Dacey as Executive Director. Lindsay Hamilton is going to be taking over as Chief of Staff. I believe they're making a public announcement in the next 24 hours, but the story might still be under wraps when you come to CAP tonight. Two new bosses in three months! Between you and Jess leaving there is a lot of turmoil over here, but I'm learning an incredible amount in the process and taking on responsibilities that far exceed my tenure. I've gotten to know Lindsay over the past few months and I think she'll bring a lot of fresh energy and focus to the executive team. I'm excited to see how I can grow under her leadership.

I'm looking forward to seeing you tonight! Also- if it's OK with you I'd like to stop by for one of your Georgetown classes this semester. As I may have mentioned, I'm planning on law school down the line. Let me know if you have any recommendations on which class I should attend!

See you soon,

Milia

Subject: [big campaign] New Huff Post from Creamer -Friends Don't Let Friends Not Vote Massachusetts' Se

Friends Don't Let Friends Not Vote Massachusetts' Senate Election

Here's the bottom line: an enormous amount is at stake in Tuesday's election in Massachusetts to fill Senator Ted Kennedy's seat. So much is at stake that every Democrat – and every independent who wants fundamental change in Washington – has to vote – no matter how hard it is to get to the polls, no matter how inconvenient, no matter how disappointed you are with the pace of change in Washington.

Not only that. If you don't live in Massachusetts, get on the phone, call every friend you have in Massachusetts and tell them to stop what they're doing and go vote. Tell them that what they do will have a dramatic impact on you and your life no matter where you live in America – that if they care about you at all, they have to go vote to defeat Republican Scott Brown and elect Democrat Martha Coakley.

Just think how outrageous it would be if an election to replace the nation's most ardent champion of health care for all, stopped health care reform. That's exactly what Republican Scott Brown has said he will do – be the 41st vote to stop health insurance reform dead in its tracks.

But it's not just that. Brown postures like an advocate for ordinary people. But in fact he is a staunch advocate of the failed economic policies of George Bush that resulted in:

Zero growth in private sector jobs over his 2 terms (compare that to growth of 22 million jobs over the eight years of Bill Clinton);

Huge tax breaks for millionaires and a higher relative tax burden for the middle class;

Zero growth in median income for ordinary working people;

Two thirds of all the growth in Gross Domestic Product going to the top 1% of the population;

No accountability for the Wall Street bankers whose reckless speculation plunged the economy into the worst collapse since the Great Depression.

Remember that George Bush inherited a huge budget surplus from Bill Clinton and ran up more debt than all of the previous Presidents in American history.

And now, Brown says he would oppose President Obama's proposed tax on Wall Street profits that would allow us to recover all the money from the massive taxpayers' bailout that was necessary to prevent the worldwide financial system from complete disintegration.

Brown is apparently perfectly happy to let the Wall Street gang wallow in the obscene profits they made this year-- as a direct result of taxpayer assistance – taking billions of dollars in bonuses while many Americans who actually produce things for a living still can't find work.

By voting for Brown – or staying home from the polls – voters would be choosing to take the country back to the bad old days when Bush's pro-Wall-Street-Banker-economic policy created the massive mess that we have been slowly trying to clean up for the last 12 months.

Surely one of the reasons why that clean-up has taken longer than hoped is that some conservative Democrats have erected hurdles that block change. But it is nothing compared to what we would see if the Republicans once again have enough votes to stall every Democratic initiative in the Senate. If you're a progressive Democrat and are unhappy with how change initiatives are watered down by the conservative Democrats, wait until we have to negotiate everything with the Bush-economic-policy-Republicans.

That is exactly what the Republicans hope to pull off Tuesday – and that’s why it is so important for every Democrat, every Progressive, every change-oriented Independent call their friends in Massachusetts and insist they go to the polls and vote for Coakley.

I know there has been a lot of talk about the early complacency of the Coakley campaign --- or whether she knows the roster of the Red Sox. But this is not a game. And this election isn’t just about Martha Coakley. It’s about the direction of America. It’s about continuing the momentum for fundamental change that has begun this year and has so, so much further to go.

The outcome of this race is entirely a function of turnout. The latest poll has Brown up by 3 points. Other polls have had Coakley slightly ahead. These poll results reflect different assumptions the pollsters make about who turns out.

There is also no question that early in this race, hardcore Republicans and Brown supporters were more motivated to turn out. Now the percentage of our supporters who say they are likely to vote is shooting up.

One thing is clear: if there is a low overall turnout, the more-motivated Brown supporters will carry the day. If turnout surges – especially among Democrats, Progressives, women, African Americans, Latinos, and union voters – Coakley will win.

There are substantially more Democrats registered in Massachusetts than Republicans, but don’t let that fool you. There are loads of “un-enrolled” or independent voters in the state. And even though the state is thought to be a Democratic stronghold, remember that until 2008 it had consistently elected Republicans Governors– including former Republican Presidential aspirant Mitt Romney.

Luckily there is something each and every one of us can do about this race. If you live in Massachusetts, go sign up to walk precincts – join the phone banks being run by the Coakley Campaign or Organize for America (OFA) – call all of your neighbors and friends – and make sure you vote early.

For many years Massachusetts has exported volunteers to surrounding states in big national elections. Now it’s time for activists in New Hampshire, Vermont, Maine, Rhode Island, upstate New York and Connecticut to return the favor. Go to Massachusetts and help turn out the vote. No one will have more impact on the outcome of this election than motivated, reliable volunteers who pull out voters.

If you live outside of Massachusetts you can also go the OFA’s website and sign up to be part of a virtual phone bank <http://my.barackobama.com/page/content/hqblog> .

Many people will be off work Monday to commemorate the birthday of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Take the day and go do what Dr. King would want you to do. I’m sure he would have agreed that there is nothing more important you can do to fight for social and economic justice, over the next two days, than beat back this attempt by the Republicans and Scott Brown to return us to the failed policies of the Bush years.

Don’t be one of those people who regrets months from now that they didn’t do something at a critical point to help change history. Don’t allow us all to regret that America didn’t pass health insurance reform, or re-regulate the Wall Street Banks, or pass clean energy legislation, or comprehensive immigration reform, or a serious jobs bill because we had to make a deal with Republican Leader Mitch McConnell and his friends in the Chamber of Commerce, the big insurance companies, and Wall Street in order to get anything done. That may happen if Scott Brown wins Tuesday in Massachusetts.

Real democracy – and the fight for social and economic justice – are not spectator sports. If you’re unhappy with the pace of change, use this occasion to get out of the stands. Go onto the playing field and do something about it. The Republicans and Scott Brown want to erect a huge new barrier to change in the Senate on Tuesday. It is up to each and every one of us to go out in the streets and make sure that they fail.

Friends don’t let friends not vote in the Massachusetts Senate race.

CAP Middle East Trip Jan 2014 memo - long version.docx.pdf

Three things:

1. I thought the discussion was really adrift on progressive foreign policy. I have this longer piece coming out in Democracy Journal later this month (attached) - called "Against Disengagement" - it aims to answer a question I raised in this recent Washington Post oped:

http://www.washingtonpost.com/opinions/obamas-foreign-policy-to-do-list/2014/01/30/5ad0bcd4-8925-11e3-916e-e01534b1e132\_story.html

2. Here's the trip report from January in the second attachment. Sending the long version again because you said you hadn't seen it.

3. Thanks again for seeing Tawfic and Nick. Just recall that he's the one who hosted us in the region and is backing the Christians research, which is coming together nicely. The other brother you saw last month is more connected, but he hasn't formally backed our work.

We have a bunch of research coming out now - an Egypt report this week, and some other work later this spring.

Thanks again for everything - we miss you & Eryn.

John,

Hope you're doing well. We missed you on the January trip and I trust you received the trip report and heard from others about it.

I'm writing to see if there's any chance for you to meet with Tawfic Khoury & Nick Papandreou March 4, 5 or 6, even for 15 minutes or so. As you know, Tawfic hosted our delegation for dinner in Dubai and we've continued to cultivate that relationship after your initial discussions. I'm tentatively planning a dinner on Tuesday, March 4 if you get a free chance for a bite to eat outside of the office, but I know they would value any time, even a few minutes.

The rest of our work is going well - we're all excited about Vikram. I have a new piece on progressive foreign policy coming out in Democracy next month.

Our field research on the Islamist project is just about done and we have really fascinating reports on Egypt & Tunisia coming out with another on Syria later this spring. Plus the Christians in the Middle East conference at Villanova at the end of March is coming together nicely.

We miss you and hope you're doing well.

Subject: RE: Plan for McCain research

I am extremely happy about this project.
Would love to be involved and have you utilize the ongoing research we are doing.

Here are a few thoughts on the proposal from our team, looking forward to talking about the next poll.

States:

- Not sure why we're dropping MN, seems w. the Senate race and convention and Pawlenty that would be important.

Issues

- It would be helpful to see if we are making progress on special interests
- Need a good Iraq baseline question to see if McCain is changing debate, something we can track throughout.

Other:

We are as interested in the “who” suburban, rural, we are polling as the issues. The plan includes a possible focus on women, might be something we want to do is over sample if we are worried about a certain group later in the summer. Focus groups. I know this is not in the plan, but we are all a little nervous about stuff that won’t show in issue polls.. the lobbyist, age, patriot, religious stuff. Perhaps we can augment with other AFL research or focus groups going on.

The Plum Line Greg Sargent's blog

New MoveOn Ad Asks Dems: "Which Side Of History Will You Be On?"

The air cover from the left is now gearing up in earnest, and MoveOn is set to unleash a national ad pressing House Dems to support health reform by suggesting that in historical terms it would rank up there with the Civil Rights movement and the freeing of the slaves.

The ad, the group's first national spot in the final stretch, was sent my way by a MoveOn official, and it features shots of Abraham Lincoln, Martin Luther King and Lyndon Johnson:

"Throughout history, America has been blessed with heroic leaders — individuals who helped us to navigate between right and wrong," the spot says. "We need our leaders to fight for what's right. Call Congress today and ask them: Which side of history will YOU be on?"

The spot, a six-figure buy on national cable, comes after MoveOn's membership voted overwhelmingly last week to support the Senate bill, suggesting there's now a high degree of consensus on the left that supporting this measure is the best way forward.

Also: While the ad makes a rather grandiose appeal to lawmakers' historical consciences, it also sends a straightforward political message to them: If they take a tough vote and pass reform, they'll have major air cover from big-spending groups as they head into the bruising fall campaign. If not, well...

Subject: RE: Funding Conference Call

All,

We would like to resume the weekly funding conference calls. It is imperative that we lay out the funding priorities for the next 50 days.

In addition, we will be having David Friedman join the call. As you know David is generously spending his time to make sure that some of the independent field effort is fully funded.

For this week, we would like to do the call tomorrow, Tuesday, at 5:30 pm. Please let me know if you can join us. I will send out a dial in later today.

I took a listen--the guest was Dr. Raymond Struyk of Results for Development (DC think tank), and author of the forthcoming book, "Improving Think Tank Management", in which I hope he doesn't mention you because he clearly can't tell the difference between you and Tony. He's published in the past with Urban Institute and OSI.

I can draft up a concise request for correction, or give them a call if you think that's worth doing.

Subject: checking in -- set up a time to talk?

Hi John,

It was great seeing you last week at the Christmas party, and congrats again on the great work with last week's energy/environment/climate change dream team appointments. Thanks to all of your work we will certainly see some great things happen in 2009!

About a month ago, I sent you an email letting you know that I was acting as a policy advisor to the DOI transition team, and that after conversations with Carol and David Hayes I had thrown my name in the hat for a science policy advisor position with the Administration. Now that the Agency heads have all been nominated and I've gotten a better sense of what role(s) I might fit best in, I wanted to check in with you again.

I've done a fair amount of soul searching about this -- as I think you know, the misuse of science in policy making is what brought me to DC in the first place, and I am very drawn to a role where I could help enable bringing science back to executive branch decision-making. However, I've also equally been thinking about my mom's health, and the wonderful time I've had working with you and the Energy Team at CAP.

After talking with my family, doing a lot of thinking, and talking with Carol and David about how science advisor positions might work and might allow for visits to the west coast on a quarterly basis -- I've decided I would like to pursue the opportunity of working with the administration. I'm especially interested in potential science advisor roles at DOI, OSTP, and EPA -- I would very much like to apply my ecology and energy/global warming policy backgrounds to a crosscutting advisory and policy development position, and I wanted to make sure I am checking all of the right boxes with you and others. Would you have 5 minutes or so to discuss this sometime soon?

I hope you and your family have a very nice holiday and that you get to take a bit of a well-deserved rest!

My best, and look forward to talking with you soon,
Thanks,
Kit

Subject: Allen West's Antics - You won't believe this.

About | Our Candidates

Dear John,

When he was in Iraq, Allen West violated the law, was relieved of his command in Iraq, and brought his radical views to Congress.

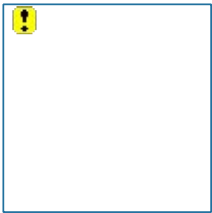

Now, he is suing Congressman-elect Patrick Murphy, who defeated him in a fair and square election. We need to help Patrick with legal costs to fight this, because we don't need West's radical views in Congress any longer.

It's ironic that in his last desperate attempt to hold on to power, Allen West is turning to court. It's ironic because West violated the Uniform Code of Military Justice laws on torture, when he was in Iraq.

In short, Allen West turns to the law, only when he thinks the law will help Allen West. When he doesn't like the law, he thumbs his nose at it.

As in Iraq, Allen West is on the wrong side of the law, and is suing because he is the same loose cannon that he was in the military.

CLICK HERE TO HELP SEND ALLEN WEST HOME, FOR GOOD

I take this extremely personally. Allen West's actions in Iraq put the lives of all the men and women I served with in danger. That he parades around like a man with honor is disgusting.

So, I am asking you to help one last time this year. Let's finally be rid of this man who is an embarrassment to all of us who served.

Sincerely,

Hi-

I wanted to follow up on two questions related to the labor reception on Tuesday night.

1. Thursday night at the dinner John and I attended, Lee encouraged us to have Randi say a few words at the reception. Lee mentioned this several times. Originally we had only planned to have John welcome, introduce the Secretary and then the Secretary speaks. Do we want to add Randi in the mix? I think it would be a nice touch, but wasn't sure how you felt. It could go like this...

John welcomes and opens, invites Randi to say a few words and introduce the Secretary, the Secretary gives brief remarks.

This might annoy Trumka and Lily, but honestly, Randi's early endorsement deserves a lot of credit. I also think Lee's urging gives us a good sense that it would be ok.

What do you think?

2. SEIU asked if the Secretary will be doing Q&A. I said no. Is that correct? I told them its one on one conversations.

Subject: Veterans' health care and last night's debate

John -

There are a number of very important issues at stake in this presidential election, but for veterans and military family members, the Koch Brothers' campaign to privatize the VA is near the top of the list.

Last night, at the Democratic debate in New Hampshire, Rachel Maddow was the first moderator to ask specifically whether or not the candidates on the stage would support privatizing the VA. And we should all be heartened by their answers:

Hillary Clinton: "Well, first of all, I'm absolutely against privatizing the V.A. And I am going to do everything I can to build on the reforms that Senator Sanders and others in Congress have passed to try to fix what's wrong with the V.A."

Bernie Sanders: "We've got to strengthen the V.A. We do not privatize the V.A."

This is a great development, and we should thank the candidates for their forthright answers.

Sign our petition thanking Bernie Sanders and Hillary Clinton for pledging to strengthen - not privatize - veterans' health care.

A few months ago, shortly after the presidential campaign began, Jeb Bush made big news by saying he would privatize veterans' health care. Rand Paul said the same. Marco Rubio followed suit.

Meanwhile, the Koch Brothers' announced that they planned to $800 million this election, with a healthy chunk of that going towards an organization called "Concerned Veterans for America."

So like Bernie Sanders said last night, "Yes, there are people out there who are trying to privatize it." But we should be thankful there are a number of candidates who will fight back against their attempts in the year ahead.

Sign our note thanking Hillary Clinton and Bernie Sanders for standing against VA privatization. Add your name here:

<http://action.votevets.org/dem-debate>

If veterans, military family members, and VoteVets supporters make their voices heard on this issue, we'll stop efforts to privatize the VA in 2016.

All my best,

Jon Soltz

Thanks for the update. I would be happy to see you before work if you want to pop in to the office between 7:30 and 8 Am. If that doesn't work, definitely see the white house docs. You can have them call me so we can decide if an antibiotic is necessary. You can also do an Epsom salt soak tonight and see if that helps.

I will be up for another hour or so if you want to call. You can also text me a picture of the hand.

Take care, Mustafa

Dr. Haque,

I've been doing well, but fear that the little finger may be getting infected. I saw Daniel Saturday and this morning and all seemed fine except the place where the finger joins the palm continues to weep. We concluded that it might be a good idea to have the White House Docs re-dress the wound with clean peri strips. I've arranged to do that tomorrow morning.

Tonight the finger seems to be swelling more and hurts a bit more. Color is still pink and consistent with other skin. Swelling could be a result of PT, but seems possible that it's infected. I can keep my a appointment with the WH med unit and ck in after that, unless you think it's better to come in straight away.

As always, thanks for everything including the cherry blossom admission!

I am very happy because this is the best realistic result to come out of Paris. Now we can truly say that the Republicans are the only thing standing in the way of literally saving civilization. If they don't cooperate then it is no longer hyperbole to say that they are truly enemies of the state, enemies of the world. I am so happy I can say to my kids, yeah, people have finally gotten around to doing the right thing. It's not all corrupt. There is a chance. I'm not naive enough to think that this is the solution, but just a new beginning. Too late? Yes, should have happened years ago. But finally, a plan for real action.

I'm totally one hundred percent for Hillary because if any one of these bozos makes it to the White House, then we'll have a revolution on our hands.

Dear John,

Be great to see you.

Susan Kleinberg's "Kairos," at the Alliance Francaise for the opening of the 2013 Venice Biennale, derives from work with the scientific team of the Louvre over the past year. It is a landscape of possibilities in deep migration.

These images were filmed through the Louvre's Hirox microscope from elements related to an enigmatic Mesopotamian figure. They are an avalanche of the possible, microcosm and immense in space, from the center of what we don't know to the implications of imagination. Slowly unraveling beyond descriptive, they reach to an almost undulating, disequilibrating atomic level, in deep color.

This Mesopotamian figure, Ishtar, is a major goddess, rubies from Burma in her eyes and navel, with her palm outstretched in the classic gesture of offering, an invitation into the work. The unraveling images are an excavation through borders, an essential comment on location of perspective. The microscope has functioned as an invisible facilitator.

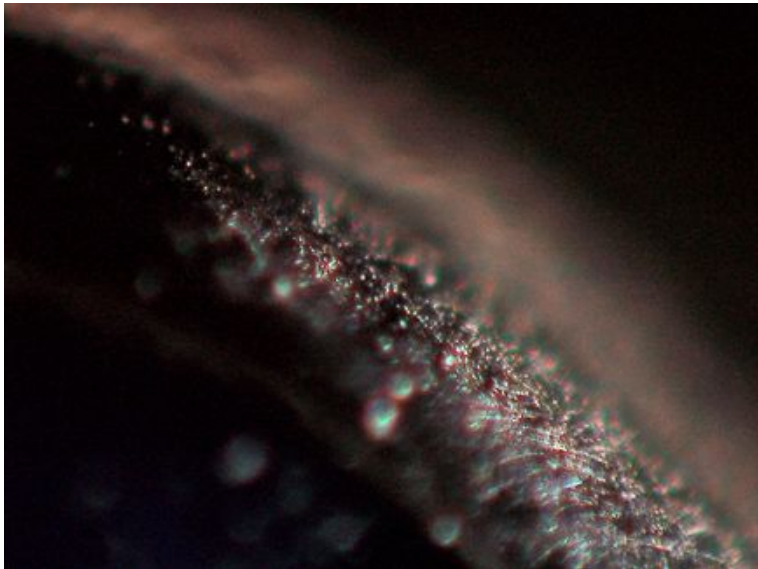

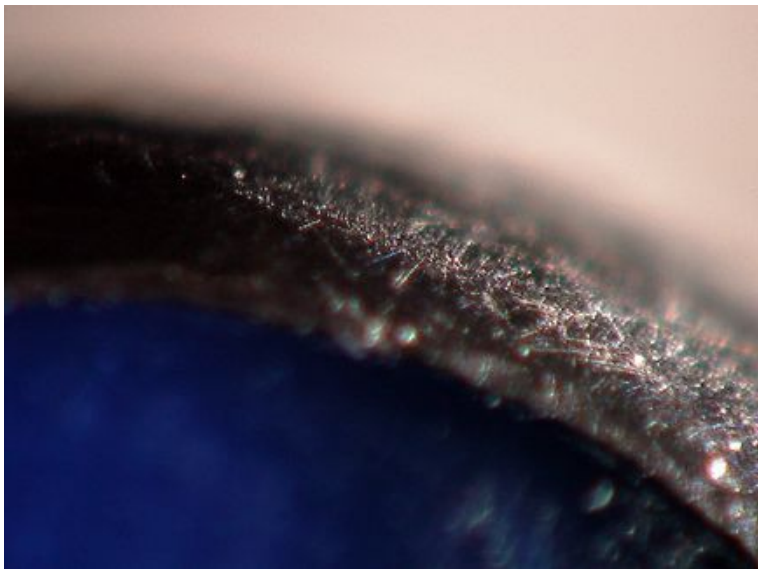

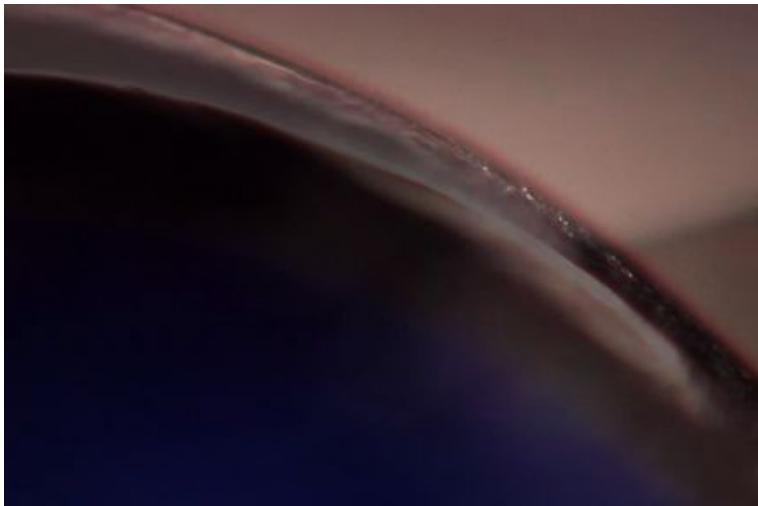

The Alliance Francaise is located in the Casino Venier, once the illicit meeting place of a great Venetian lady.

John -

Excellent news! Yesterday afternoon, the U.S. Senate voted overwhelmingly to expand veterans' health care at VA facilities across the country.

As an Operation Iraqi Freedom veteran who relies on the VA medical system for my primary health care, I wanted to write a note saying thank you for signing our petition on this issue.

Three months ago, the right-wing of the Senate filibustered a similar bill, but now, the VA has the authority to hire more doctors and nurses to keep up with the influx of veterans recently returned from two new wars overseas. Even more, the Senate also voted to increase tuition assistance and job training for veterans returning home, helping them to better reintegrate with society.

It's a big victory, and it has a lot to do with all of us making our voices heard.

But now it's important Senators know that we appreciate their vote on this issue. Use our Contact Congress tool and send a message thanking them for standing up for veterans.

This is one vote, and we all appreciate the action. But there are still a number of Senators and Representatives who have consistently put their small-government at-all-costs ideology ahead of the veterans they've callously sent off to war.

Elected officials like Senator Mitch McConnell, Congressman Tom Cotton and Steve Daines who forget that the commitment to care for the men and women who put on our nation's uniform shouldn't stop once they return home from the wars they were sent to fight.

We're going to continue our work educating their constituents, and we're glad you're with us in that fight.

All the best,

National Memo opinion: Joe Conason: "Plutocrat Or Populist? Actually, Hillary Clinton Is Neither"

By Joe Conason

October 30, 2014, 6:00 a.m. EDT

As America's biggest political target -- a status she is likely to enjoy for the foreseeable future -- Hillary Rodham Clinton takes incoming fire of every caliber from all directions. One day her words are ripped from context to depict her as a plutocratic elitist; on another day, she is quoted, selectively, to prove that she is a raving populist. And on still another day last week, when she was campaigning in North Carolina for Senator Kay Hagan, a right-wing rag tarred her as a "plutocratic populist."

Her partisan critics never worry about such ludicrous contradiction, so long as they can keep pumping out the cheap shots. Having endured the same tactics in the White House, the Senate, and the State Department, in campaigns and in daily life, she must find it all boringly familiar by now.

So far her popularity has remained remarkably durable – but the constant effort to sow confusion about her sympathies, positions, and policies, especially on economic issues, still deserves rebuttal.

Ever since she mentioned the fact that she and her husband were “flat broke,” meaning deep in debt, when they left the White House, Clinton’s most hypocritical adversaries on the right have tried to provoke envy. Accepting a large speaking fee from the likes of Goldman Sachs bolstered the meme that she is “out of touch” with the problems faced by middle-class families.

Now, as she speaks out on economic issues during the midterm campaign, she is portrayed as “copying” the “populist, anti-corporate rhetoric” of Senator Elizabeth Warren (D-MA), courageous scourge of crooked bankers and financial fraudsters.

But the truth about Hillary’s economic outlook is both simpler and more complex.

The simple part is that for her entire public career, Clinton has been a consistent advocate for working families and the middle class — notably on issues like the minimum wage, which she fought to raise as a senator. She sponsored legislation not only to raise the wage, repeatedly, but demanded a ban on congressional and executive pay increases until workers’ wages went up first.

“I’m talking about people who get up and go to work every day, [whose paychecks] haven’t been raised since 1997,” she told a conservative farmers’ group in 2007. “And congressional salaries have gone up more than $30,000 at the same time. I don’t think we should have any more congressional pay raises until, number one, the minimum wage is raised, but number two, until average wages start going up, because the last five years Americans have been treading water.”

During her Senate career and then as a Democratic presidential candidate, Clinton told everyone who would listen what she thought about questions of fairness, inequality, and growth that remain central today. She dismissed the idea that higher minimum wages damage growth and employment; she demanded restoration of the traditional balance between government and markets, which had tipped too much toward corporate power; she blasted the Bush administration’s cuts in assistance to the poor and unemployed; and she urged, above all, that the forces destroying the middle class must be restrained and ultimately reversed.

Whatever her connections with the wealthy and well connected, Clinton doesn’t seem terribly impressed. “With all due respect, rich people did not make America great,” she said in 2006. “Every society throughout history has had the rich and the poor. It was America’s destiny to create something new, a middle class that provided upward mobility for the poor and opportunity for the many. Our strength, our economy, our values derive from the promise of America, the promise of lifting yourself up through hard work in a society that rewarded results.” In her presidential campaign, she called for a “21st-century progressivism” in the trust-busting, labor-friendly style of Theodore Roosevelt.

The more complicated part, however, is that Clinton isn’t anti-business, hostile to markets, or suspicious of enterprise, as “populists” are supposed to be. She once sat on the Walmart board of directors. She often speaks admiringly of her father’s small drapery business, she pushed hard on behalf of American corporations abroad as Secretary of State, and at the Clinton Foundation she now promotes small- and medium-business development to empower women in America and around the world.

Clinton is a sharp, tough, determined politician who rose, like her husband, from an ordinary family. She understands the pressures wreaking havoc on the system of rewards and rules that built this country. Neither plutocrat nor populist, she firmly believes a strong middle class is the essence of a democratic society. But amid the ceaseless clamor of right-wing ideology, that may just be radical enough.

Former Obama chief strategist David Plouffe is advising Hillary Clinton to announce her intention to run for president shortly after the 2014 election concludes, according to a terrific piece this morning by Politico's Maggie Haberman and Glenn Thrush. "Why not?" Plouffe reportedly told Clinton about the prospect of an early announcement. "They are already going after you."

Plouffe is right -- both for the practical reasons outlined in the quote above and for more symbolic, but no less important, reasons too.

The reality of being Hillary Clinton -- the best known politician not named Barack Obama in the country and a massive frontrunner for the Democratic presidential nomination -- is that the campaign both for and against her is already well under way. There are outside organizations designed to gather opposition research against her (America Rising) and to protect her from that criticism (Correct The Record). There is a super PAC -- Priorities USA -- that is expected to carry the load of the pro-Clinton, anti-Clinton-opponent advertising and another one (Ready for Hillary) building a grassroots network for her candidacy.

Hillary Clinton, in the eyes of the political world, is already running for president. Waiting to acknowledge what everyone already knows and has spent the last year-plus preparing for makes little sense -- particularly because running for the nation's highest office requires massive amounts of time for fundraising, organization building, message development and so on and so forth. Why play coy when there's no mystery? Get in and start running. Everybody already assumes you are.

The less obvious but maybe more important reason for Clinton to announce sooner rather than later is that it would be somewhat unorthodox and unexpected. The conventional wisdom surrounding Clinton's timing on announcing is that she wants to wait as long as possible for people to see her in a political light. Her approval ratings have been sky high for years now because she hasn't been in office (or running for office) so why not preserve that "I'm not a politician (yet)" vibe for as long as possible?

Clinton spent the entirety of her 2008 race for president guided by just this sort of conventional wisdom. It led to her being perceived -- and being -- an overly cautious politician who always wanted to see which way the wind was blowing before making up her mind about anything. (Remember that the start of Clinton's slide in the 2008 primary was when she tried to have it both ways on a question about undocumented workers getting driver's licenses at the end of a debate in the summer of 2007.)

Clinton needs to run a different kind of campaign this time. And, she has the luxury to do some unconventional things because, unlike in 2008, there is no real threat to her among the other Democrats thinking semi-seriously about running for president. By "taking a risk" and announcing early -- although, of course, it's really no risk at all given her lack of competition -- Clinton can show insiders, donors and activists (aka the only people paying any attention at this point) that this campaign is going to be different than the last one.

Add it up and there's really no reason for Clinton not to get into the presidential race shortly after the 2014 midterms conclude. Unless, of course, she decides not to run.

October 30, 2014, 8:00 a.m. EDT

Hillary Rodham Clinton is hitting the trail hard for Democrats in the home stretch, making a whirlwind tour of fall battlegrounds as the days dwindle to the Nov. 4 midterm elections.

But don't expect most of that new visibility to last much past Nov. 5.

Clinton's itinerary this week includes stops in Iowa Wednesday for Rep. Bruce Braley, in a close Senate race against Republican Joni Ernst; in New Hampshire Sunday, to aid Sen. Jeanne Shaheen in fighting off a challenge from former Massachusetts Sen. Scott Brown (R), and give a boost to Gov. Maggie Hassan's far smoother path to reelection; and in between, to Louisiana to give a boost to Sen. Mary Landrieu's battle to hold on to her Senate seat and Kentucky Senate candidate Alison Lundergan Grimes's effort to claim Senate Minority Leader Mitch McConnell's.

Clinton's packed schedule this month has also included events in Colorado for Sen. Mark Udall, Florida for gubernatorial candidate Charlie Crist, Massachusetts for gubernatorial candidate Martha Coakley, Nevada for Sen. Harry Reid, Pennsylvania for gubernatorial candidate Tom Wolf, Illinois for Gov. Pat Quinn, Maryland for gubernatorial candidate Anthony Brown and New York and California for Democratic campaign cash. Her heavy midterm stumping reflects her unique position as a hugely popular figure and leading fund raiser in her party now and potential presidential candidate later.

But the day after the votes are counted, Clinton probably turns into a political pumpkin. No matter how the election goes for Democrats, she isn't likely to appear among the party leaders crowing or crying on television.

Why? Because after the midterms are over, there'll be nothing standing in Clinton's way for a second presidential run -- but it's not in her interest to make any sudden moves.

Clinton has said she will decide by early 2015. Assuming she intends to run, the planning will begin in earnest in the weeks following the midterms.

And assuming she intends to run, going quiet for a couple of months would let her delay the moment when her every tiny move is evaluated through the prism of 2016. Sure, that's already happening -- but maintaining even a brief period of relative invisibility would give her a chance to digest the outcome of the midterms and quietly collect assurances of political and financial support nationwide.

After near-daily public appearances now, Clinton has just three known public events after the midterms: An appearance at the 10th anniversary celebration of the Clinton presidential library in Arkansas on Nov. 14 and speaking appearances at a League of Conservation Voters event in New York on Dec. 1 and at the Massachusetts Conference for Women on Dec. 4.

The likelihood that Clinton will nearly disappear overnight, coupled with her past distaste for mixing it up with the press, made for a bit of irony in Iowa.

Clinton took a swipe at Republican Senate candidate Joni Ernst on Wednesday, telling a Cedar Rapids crowd that Ernst's no-show for an Editorial Board interview with the Des Moines Register is "disqualifying."

"I have concluded that Iowans take politics really seriously," CNN quoted Clinton as saying. "You test your candidates, you actually force them to be the best they can be, and they have to be willing to answer the tough questions."

October 30, 2014, 9:00 a.m. EDT

Sen. Ted Cruz (R-Texas) believes the Republican Party needs to avoid one crucial mistake in the 2016 presidential election: running a candidate "in the mold" of Mitt Romney, the 2012 nominee.

"If we run another candidate like that, Hillary Clinton will be the next president," Cruz said Thursday morning on CNBC.

Cruz, a conservative firebrand who is looking at his own potential presidential campaign, urged Republicans to instead "learn from history."

"We need to look to history and what works and what doesn't," he said. "The one thing is clear is if Republicans run another candidate in the mold of a Bob Dole, or a John McCain, or a Mitt Romney — and let me be clear, all three of those are good, honorable men. They're decent men. They're patriots. But if we run another candidate in the mold of a Bob Dole, or a John McCain, or Mitt Romney, we will end up with the same result."

Cruz was responding to a question about the potential candidacy of former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush (R-Florida), the brother and son of the two most recent Republican presidents. Cruz declined to say whether Bush was too far to the left, but spoke broadly about uninspiring candidates.

"Jeb has not declared his candidacy. I like Jeb. I'm a fan of Jeb Bush's. I'm going to let him decide if he's running first and let the primary voters make a decision," Cruz said.

By Matthew J. Belvedere

October 30, 2014

Sen. Ted Cruz, a tea party favorite and possible presidential contender, told CNBC on Thursday the only way the GOP can win the White House in 2016 is to run a strong conservative candidate.

"We need to learn from history," the Texas Republican said in a "Squawk Box" interview. "If Republicans run another candidate in the mold of a Bob Dole or a John McCain or a Mitt Romney ... we will end up with the same result, which is millions of people will stay home on Election Day."

"If we run another candidate like that," he continued, "Hillary Clinton will be the next president."

In political circles, many believe the former secretary of State will again seek the Democratic nomination for president, though she has not said either way yet. Hillary Clinton lost the nomination in 2008 to Barack Obama.

Supports states' rights on gay marriage

On social issues, Cruz said he supports the rights of the states to decide whether to allow same-sex marriage even though he personally believes in marriage between one man and one woman.

He appeared on CNBC ahead of next week's midterm election and as news was breaking Thursday morning about Apple CEO Tim Cook announcing he's gay.

"I support marriage between one man and one woman," Cruz said. "And I support the Constitution letting each state decide each marriage law consistent with the values of their citizens."

"One of the problems of the 'big government left' is they want everything to be a one-size-fits-all solution from Washington," he said.

In a separate "Squawk Box" interview Thursday, liberal Democrat Barney Frank, retired openly-gay congressman from Massachusetts, praised Cruz for those comments.

'Very optimistic' about midterm election

Cruz, known for bucking the Republican establishment, is not up for re-election until 2018. But the freshman senator from Texas said he's been crisscrossing the nation in support of conservative candidates in the runup to Tuesday's voting.

"I am very optimistic," he said. "I think Republicans are going to retake the Senate. We're going to retire Harry Reid." The Senator Majority Leader Reid, a Democrat from Nevada, has been a thorn in the GOP's side for years.

In a USA Today op-ed earlier this month, Cruz laid out an agenda for 2015, assuming that Republicans would retain the House and gain control of the Senate. He said Congress should work to jumpstart the economy, safeguard constitutional liberties and strengthen national security. He also advocated repealing Obamacare, auditing the Federal Reserve, and getting rid of the federal education Common Core standards.

He echoed those economic themes in Thursday's CNBC interview. "On Wall Street, things are booming. But for working men and women, life has gotten harder and harder and harder. What we're doing under the Obama economy isn't working."

By Ed Tibbetts

October 29, 2014

Hillary Clinton urged Democrats in Davenport on Wednesday to work the rest of the week to get Senate hopeful Bruce Braley elected, accusing his Republican opponent Joni Ernst of ducking tough questions.

Clinton, a potential 2016 presidential candidate, campaigned for Braley at a union hall in Cedar Rapids and later at the Davenport RiverCenter.

Clinton seized on the controversy over Ernst not meeting with some newspaper editorial boards and said she was trying to let outside money win the race for her.

"I've never seen anything like it," Clinton said.

The former secretary of state did have some fun with the line of attack.

"Not in Iowa do people get away with not answering questions — except questions far into the future," she said, a quip that prompted cheers from the crowd.

On a range of issues, Clinton drew contrasts between Braley and Ernst, saying he stood with average Iowans, and for women. And she said what matters most is not where the candidate is from, but who they are for. "It's not just enough to be from Iowa, you have to be for Iowans," she said.

Clinton also took a poke at some of the themes of the Iowa Senate campaign, which she said are trying to distract people so "you'll be concerned about pigs and chickens than hard working women and men," college costs and the economy.

This was Clinton's second visit to the state in a month, and in Davenport she recalled her own 2008 bid for the presidency, saying Iowans like to challenge candidates.

"I have experienced that myself," she said.

Clinton finished third in the Iowa caucuses, and Republicans were too happy to point to the 2008 race Wednesday, noting that Braley didn't back Clinton then, instead choosing John Edwards and, later, Barack Obama.

Still, the Waterloo congressman was effusive in praising Clinton, recalling singing "Happy Birthday" to her years ago, and he talked about the birth of her first grandchild, which drew a wide smile from her.

For his part, Braley continued to press Ernst, saying she was trying to conceal her views.

"She is trying to hide she is not on your side," Braley said.

The closing days of the campaign find a tight race, though Republicans say they have the momentum, while Democrats say they have a superior grassroots effort.

A Quinnipiac University poll, released Wednesday, said Ernst leads by a 49-45 margin.

Republicans touted the results, and they also pushed back against the idea that Ernst is ducking questions.

Ernst's campaign has said she is meeting with voters on a 99 county tour, but also going face to face with journalists.

The conservative research group, America Rising, also emailed reporters Wednesday a list of about a half dozen instances when Clinton herself had failed to answer questions on a range of topics.

See below. I read more closely and it appears she wants to do this at CAP with maria Shriver and her organization. She's hoping for Obama/WH blessing/interest. Doesn't sound like any money in the project now to pay for Laura -- might be some later. Sounds speculative -- could work but I fear another First Tuesday like long gestation while we front Laura's involvement.

She is meeting with me tomorrow. I would be inclined to say that sounds like a good project but she's got to be fully paid for by money she raises with maria or otherwise. If Obama folks are interested, I wouldn't apply the 50-50 rule -- So a go-no go decision is not dependant up on her raising twice what she costs us. But if she wants CAP to make major investment in project beyond just her time, she's got to raise twice as much and cover all costs and other staff time.

That's a bit harsh. Does it sound right?

I owe us still but have new developments that would change. This past week, I've been working through prospects of a potential project that if we can help make happen, would occupy most if not all of my time. It involves a partnership with Maria Shriver and a natl study of the state of the American woman. Early conversations have been had with Valerie Jarrett (with Maria and her staff) about President requesting or blessing in advance. ( Btw, CAP potential involvement not mentioned in that convo, just the general idea of the need for a natl study). ) Next step is Mel and First Lady's office. CAP would serve as a voice on policy and oversight of commissioned natl polling project, planning and potentially media outreach. Maria would chair roundtables throughout the year in various settings and with all kinds of women - women on their own, who constitute more than half of all women -- Single, divorced and widowed. Professional women. Blue and pink collar women. Stay at home moms. Retired women. Single women. Likely to Involve activist voices (incl celeb types attached to relevant causes) and electeds tbd. In addition to 'state of' report would be recommendation of policy proposals that would directly impact their unique needs. Much of which I suspect will fall under exsisting CAP ideas and recommendations from the Poverly Commission. Nirvana would be presenting the work to the President, followed by a day long conference and congressional hearing. Regardless of admin blessing or involvement Maria would still want to do - can be presented at her annual women's conference which has become an oprah like day-long seminar devoted to women. Sparkly presenters in past have incl everyone from martha stewart to maureen dowd to suze orman and fergie presents. Very long list. Extremely well attended, I think the one I went to was 10.000 plus. Other bonus: its in LA.

They do not want to dally..going to give cutting through WH red tape for a month but then go anyway. A lot of potential for a media sponsor. Anyway a long way of saying I am starting to knock on doors to sound this out - talking to jessica and debbie goldberg today. Sarah tomorrow (Pete, your welcome to join) to gauge what the interest and feasibility is for CAP involvement. Maria has an organization behind the conference and will raise $ for. Feels like foundation support to be had. And if they manage to get blessing or commission from admin, seems like we'd have a good shot at both. We are I on ground floor, no one else involved yet. I'm writing a memo for maria for next week. Anyway, wanted to let u know. Am psyched about prospect of. L

Charles,

Here's a letter, Hillary sent to Malcolm Hoenlein in July on the BDS movement. It got some attention at the time. Please feel free to share broadly as this issue is recurring.

To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu

Dear Mr. Podesta,

I believe there is a Sister Souljah moment awaiting Sec. Clinton that will advance both the health of the Democratic party, and the aims of the Clinton campaign. I'm a lifelong Democrat, but I'm repulsed by the BDS movement that has become, in too many minds, a tenet of progressive orthodoxy. As extreme as the most conservative may be, the right wing is unswerving in its support of Israel, and shows no tolerance for anti-Semitism. I understand fully that the PM of Israel is an opportunist, and unsavory. But the larger reality is that the BDS movement, popular among academics, would be gaining adherents no matter who was PM. This is fundamentally wrong. It needs to be addressed as a moral issue and the Secretary, would, in my opinion, reap the benefits of being ( as we both know her to be ) unequivocally pro- Israel in voters' minds.

Cordially,

Charles Bane, Jr.

I spoke to Phil, and to Lisa Gioia.

explained you've been on the road for Dennis with a packed schedule (he was mtg Kathy Gasperine for drinks as we spoke!)

Phil is committed, will do HVF $353 this year and next, but doesn't like super PACs, prefers to give direct to State parties for voter reg and GOTV efforts.

He attended the Warren Buffett bfast roundtable yesterday and asked Warren a question about giving to State Parties, mentioned a proposal he has about it trying to solicit his support and other attendees - Buffett's response was, ask HRC about it, not me.

he's sending us a 1-pager, which I said I'd share w/you and others.

I hope that this message finds you well.

I had hoped to be able to make my way down to the Bay Area to attend one of the campaign strategy sessions you are holding, but unfortunately I couldn't rearrange my schedule to be with you.

While I won't see you tomorrow, I wanted to let you know that I'm willing to be as helpful as I can and that I'm willing to devote energy and time to the cause.

Since I concluded my service as Chair of the Financial Crisis Inquiry Commission, I've devoted most of my time to my business after two plus decades of a primary focus on public service and politics. With my major projects (3 utility scale solar p.v. projects totaling 255 megawatts/producing enough power for 100,000 homes and 2 large urban infill residential projects) now well underway or nearing completion, I can turn much of my focus back to progressive causes/candidates.

I'm willing to help on policy, politics, and fundraising – whatever is needed. If I can be useful/helpful, please let me know.

Safe travels.

Best,

Phil

P.S. I saw that you brought on Charlie Baker. Good – I've known Charlie since the Dukakis campaign. You're putting together a good team.

John -

Just checking in to see if you had a chance to talk to Jake. I was thinking I could send him an electronic copy of my book, and he can scan it to read the parts where HRC is mentioned.

Also, I would like to check in with him to see how I might be able to help as HRC develops the "organizing principles" for US foreign policy that she suggested would be part of her campaign.

Of course she has many experts (starting with herself) to develop her platform. But I do think that I can be a helpful part of her FP advisory team. My book is all about bringing - to a much WIDER audience - an understanding of how foreign policy is developed and implemented by the United States.

I know you've got a lot going on... but I am ready to get started!

On the social barriers is there a reason the challenges women face is not in there? Just seems like a natural and it is real. You mention "equal pay" in the economic paragraph but I think it would add real value to put a couple lines about the glass ceiling and reiterate equal pay given how much a reaction it gets for her but also add to it the barriers to work advancement & the difficulty of juggling work and family .

Also, does she use "cradle to prison pipeline?" or is that new? Just wonder if we should just say "mass incarceration."

Per a discussion some of us had on Thursday before the debate, and also drawing on what HRC has been doing over the past few days, here's a rough one page summary of a revised message frame. Oren has also added a note at the bottom about paid media strategy. I know Robby is keen to engage HRC on this as soon as possible, so we'd welcome feedback.

Joseph,

Good morning.

As you probably know, we only manufactured the shades, we did not install nor program. While we could certainly make a service stop, there would be a minimum service charge of $250 + tax for this kind of repair.

I suggest you contact International Blind who did both the installation and programming and who should still be providing this service. We of course are responsible for any additional window treatments we have and will be providing to residents.

Palmieri, White House Communications Director, to Join Clinton Team

6:56 pm ET 6:56 pm ET

Amy Chozick

Hillary Rodham Clinton has added Jennifer Palmieri, the White House's communications director, to her fledgling 2016 presidential campaign staff.

Ms. Palmieri, a veteran of both the Obama and Clinton administrations, is expected to depart the White House this spring to step into the role of Clinton's communications director, The Wall Street Journal reported on Wednesday.

Known for her professional relationship with the White House press corps, Ms. Palmieri steps into a challenging position that would include crafting a broad media strategy and dealing with the daily storms of a voracious news cycle.

Ms. Palmieri has close working relationships with John D. Podesta, who is expected to serve as the campaign chairman, and Leon E. Panetta, the former secretary of defense who is close to Mrs. Clinton.

Given the transformed media landscape, Ms. Palmieri is expected to have a team that will include other senior press aides. Brian Fallon, currently at the Justice Department, is expected to potentially handle rapid response, and Karen Finney, a longtime Democratic operative and MSNBC regular, could serve as a press secretary.

Tapping Ms. Palmieri rounds out a team of senior advisers who could lead Clinton's campaign, including Joel Benenson and Jim Margolis who both worked on President Obama's presidential campaigns. Robby Mook, who managed Terry McAuliffe's successful campaign for governor of Virginia, is expected to be campaign manager.

Ms. Palmieri and a spokesman for Mrs. Clinton did not immediately respond to requests for comment.

In 52 days, Virginians will pick their next governor. And who they choose is entirely up to us.

If people like you and me put in the time — knocking doors, making calls, and having conversations about what's on the line in November — Terry McAuliffe will come out on top. If we don't, he could fall short.

I can't do it next weekend, but want to make calls before Election Day.

If I learned one thing from last year's election, it's that there's nothing more influential than a one-on-one conversation about the power of your vote.

Those conversations can turn apathy into support, and support into excitement. They let people know there's an election happening and how to take part.

But we have a whole lot of those conversations left to have, and less than two months to have them in.

That's why I'm in — recruiting volunteers and anything else I can do to lend a hand.

And it's why I'm counting on you to join me and we made it so easy. Sign up to make calls from home during the Weekend of Action.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Lauren Weiner, 202-470-5870

Don't Expect an Alternative Health Care Bill from the Party of NO, Says Rep. Roy Blunt -- Chairman of the "House GOP Health Care Solutions Group"

Americans United for Change: Sure, when "break[ing]" the President is the GOP's only priority for health care reform, why bother pretending to have a plan of their own?

ROLL CALL: "House Republicans released a four-page outline of their ideas five weeks ago, promising to release details and a bill. But Republicans have yet to do so. They still haven't said how much their plan will cost, how they will pay for it or how many people their plan will cover... House Minority Leader John Boehner (R-Ohio) dismissed a question about when Republicans would release their bill as their press conference ended. "Our plan's been out there for over a month," Boehner said. Boehner later declined to say when Republicans would release their bill in a conference call." [Roll Call, 7/23/09 ]

Washington D.C. – If there was any doubt that Congressional Republicans are not serious about reforming health care, Americans United for Change pointed to comments made by U.S. Rep. Roy Blunt (R-MO), chairman of the "House GOP Health Care Solutions Group," admitting he is unsure whether House Republicans will bother putting forward any alternative Republican health care reform bill, followed by a refusal today by GOP House Leader John Boehner to say when or if a plan will ever emerge. Blunt's admission and Boehner's dodge comes as obstructionist rhetoric from the Party of NO has reached a fever pitch, with influential members vowing to "break" President Obama and "kill" his efforts to provide all Americans access to quality and affordable health care.

"If we're able to stop Obama on this it will be his Waterloo. It will break him." – U.S. Senator Jim DeMint \(R-SC\)

"This is no time to pull punches. Go for the kill." -- Bill Kristol, The Weekly Standard
"We don't have a health emergency" – Rudy Giuliani

Tom McMahon, Acting Executive Director, Americans United for Change: "It's understandable the guy in charge of coming up with the Republican plan for health care reform says he may not even bother. When "break[ing]" the President and "kill[ing]" health care reform has become the only priority for the Republican Party of NO, there's no need to pretend that they have any constructive ideas of their own. And now, listening to prominent Republicans like Rudy Giuliani, it sounds like they are keen to pretend there is no health care crisis at all. Sure there's no crisis for well off former mayors of New York City or Congressional Republicans with the best coverage taxpayer money can buy. But we'll see how well the 'do nothing' message from the Party of NO resonates with small businesses across the country forced to lay off employees in response to exploding health care costs, the more than 44,000 Americans losing their health care every month, or the millions of Americans turned away from the private insurance companies for having "pre-existing conditions." The reasons these guys

ActBlue

Dear John,

Donations have been flying in all week on ActBlue for Democrats and important progressive issues across the country. We're on track to break some big records.

And based on what we're seeing this week, we're already upping our projections for next year.

The only problem? We're $14k short on our own fundraising goal for the month, and that money is going to be crucial for expanding our server capacity, building new tools, and training campaigns and organizations.

It's critical that we make up that $14k and start building for next year. Will you chip in $15 right now so we can help Democrats win in 2016?

Because you've saved your payment information with ActBlue Express, your donation will go through immediately:

Express Donate: \$15

Express Donate: \$50

Express Donate: \$100

Or donate another amount:

<https://secure.actblue.com/contribute/page/upping>

Republican strategists are constantly bemoaning to the press, complaining that they don't have their own version of ActBlue.

And the truth is, they could never build one. ActBlue works because we help Democrats up and down the ballot, and because we're a non-profit fueled by donors just like you.

Together we've been able to build the most sophisticated tools in the game, and we've made small-dollar donors a force to be reckoned with.

And now we need your help again. With more and more supporters getting involved and relying on ActBlue to make contributions, we're going to need to scale up more than we planned. But it'll be worth it if we can help small-dollar donors topple big-money Republicans.

We're $14k away from our goal. Will you chip in $15 right now to help us hit our goal and fuel our grassroots tools in 2016?

Because you've saved your payment information with ActBlue Express, your donation will go through immediately:

From all of us at ActBlue, thanks.

Dear Professors,

I'm sending this list of contact information on behalf of Professor Julie O'Sullivan. I wanted to echo her thanks to you all for continuing to support our students in their clerkship application efforts through your outreach, and to thank you in advance for making calls on their behalf to judges, who often report that they rely on faculty outreach in deciding which candidates to interview in the increasingly competitive clerkship hiring process.

Attached, you will find an updated list of contact information for federal judges nationwide, thanks to Tamara Raty, who has diligently updated it.

Please feel free to refer to this list of phone numbers and emails as you reach out to judges on behalf of your students seeking clerkships for 2016 and beyond, especially as we enter what I anticipate will be the busy part of the hiring season in January and February!

John/Juliana - I've attached the detailed information for your session on Friday morning. If you could arrive at the Mandarin Oriental at 9:15 so we can get you miked etc. that would be very helpful. Someone will meet you in the lobby and escort you to the meeting room (which is on the lower level in the grand ballroom).

As per our earlier email we are not replacing Michael Beschloss who cancelled late yesterday. I think the panel will work nicely and will allow for more Q & A. The outline that is attached provides a summary of the session, our goals, and a minute by minute agenda for the flow and content of the panel. The questions are a general guide that Maria Echaveste will use as the moderator and provide a general guide. Please let me know if you have any questions/concerns/additions/edits etc.

I have also attached the agenda to the conference. I know you are not likely to attend anything else (although we would especially love to have you on Thursday night if at all possible).

Please don't hesitate to call me with any questions/concerns regarding the detailed agenda. Thanks again John. We truly appreciate your participation considering everything else on your plate. Best, Kathryn

The folks involved are both $$ and substance folks. Stacey Rubin from Laurene's office suggested that in lieu of HRC that you and I do a roundtable meeting with the group when you are out in the area. They have requested several future commitments that I have noted in the spreadsheet. They are sincerely doing their best to manage the activists at the RA. It only takes 50 signatures to raise a resolution on the floor and I have been warned about a Northeastern Sanders contingent. I think it would be good to be organized on our own behalf with a few key folks in the room (NH and IA leaders) in case anything comes up. I am a little nervous about this event. That said, their steps are moving toward a October 2nd/3rd endorsement all going to plan. I would love to know any thoughts on this you might have.

Subject: UPDATE: Race rating changed

John,

When you first start out, you start at the bottom. And if you're a hard worker, you work your way up. That's what I learned when I was growing up in the White Mountains.

It's also what I've done my entire career. I've worked my way up from waiting tables to Coconino County's first female Deputy County Attorney to Congresswoman. I didn't accomplish any of that by skirting around hard work.

The same goes for this campaign -- and we're on the right road. The race ratings are slowly moving in our favor. We were previously at "Likely Republican." Now, it's "Lean Republican."

As long as we keep up the hard work, we'll be at "Democrat win" before you know it.

We're gaining lots of steam, but if we don't work to keep it, it'll all drain away. Hitting our $30,000 goal in October will keep us on the right path. Can you contribute $5 or more?

I've never been afraid to get a little mud on my boots. That's how you know you're working hard enough.

Arizona families need a Congress that's working in their interest -- not for the special interests. And John McCain lost touch with Arizona families a long, long time ago.

John -- if we keep up our pace, we can keep the momentum. Let's not fall backward now. Help us reach the $30,000 we need in October. Give $5 or more right now.

Arizona families don't shy away from hard work. And neither can we.

Ann

John -- sorry to email so early, but this can't wait:

Today marks exactly TWO WEEKS until the Arizona Republican primary.

Why is that important? 14 days from today, we'll know which radical opponent we'll be facing in November.

I guarantee you, whoever wins will have the full backing of both Boehner and the Kochs.

That means we need to get to work -- we need to go on offense and get the facts out to Arizona voters. Are you with me?

We have some solid touches coming up in SC/MLK weekend. But, also, coming out of the debate, the idea is to have CBCI endorse. One easy change overall that we need to make is to lock down some national AA shows/ radio. This will be especially important as we go into Feb, Black History Month. This will make everyone feel better too.

Rep Cummings' statement makes some important points about standards that I hope you'd point out in your reporting.

Hey Nick, I'm writing a story about the formal request Chairman's Gowdy office sent to David Kendall today asking that Sec. Clinton hand over her email server to the State Dept IG or another independent third party. I'd like to know whether the secretary plans to do so and if she has any response to the letter. I'm on deadline now.

Thanks,

Subject: We want our money back

John --

Yesterday, President Obama announced our proposed Financial Crisis Responsibility Fee on the country's largest banks:

"My commitment is to recover every single dime the American people are owed. And my determination to achieve this goal is only heightened when I see reports of massive profits and obscene bonuses at some of the very firms who owe their continued existence to the American people... We want our money back, and we're going to get it."

The fee would recover every penny loaned to Wall Street during the financial crisis and stop the reckless abuses and excesses that nearly caused the collapse of our financial system in the first place.

But the banking industry -- among the most powerful lobbies in Washington -- is already launching attacks to stop Congress from enacting the proposal.

Barack and I aren't backing down. But to win, we'll need the American people to add their voice right away.

Thankfully, OFA supporters are already signing on to a bold statement of support: "We want our money back -- and we stand with President Obama to make sure we get it." You can add your name by clicking here.

 Add your name

The proposal is expected to recoup billions from the big banks, most of it from the ten largest. As the President said, "If these companies are in good enough shape to afford massive bonuses, they are surely in good enough shape to afford paying back every penny to taxpayers."

There is much more work to do to reform the financial system and create a new era of accountability. But the Financial Crisis Responsibility Fee is a crucial step. And with the banks already working to tear it down, I hope that I can count on you to speak out to show that Americans stand with us as we take them on.

Change isn't easy, but it's certainly worth fighting for. I'm glad you're in this fight with us.

Thank you for making it possible,

I'm distressed that DWS hired a convention CEO without consulting us after Charlie and I both told them repeatedly that we expected to be consulted--and we were under the impression they would. They didn't consult the White House either.

Madame Secretary, I'm not going to call anyone or say anything until you have your conversation with DWS, but this concerns me a lot.

John--you, Charlie and I may need to sit down with Debbie to make clear how we want things to change/improve before we are willing to consider playing ball with them.

Mr. Podesta,

About 3-4 weeks ago, Alice Germond forwarded my resume to you and let you know of my interest in working with you on the Transition Team after the election if we are fortunate enough to win.

I wanted to reintroduce myself and let you know that I am still very interested in, and excited by, the opportunity to work on the Transition Team. I know that my experience and work ethic would lend well to the team and I would become a valuable member.

Recently, I have been hired on as the campaign's Scheduling Director for Western PA. I arrived about 3 weeks ago and have hit the ground running.

I just wanted to touch base and keep my name on your radar as the election draws near.

And please do feel free to contact me at any time - this is my permanent email and my cell is 917-474-1264.

Subject: Nominate Faculty for the President's Awards for Distinguished Scholar-Teachers

Office of the President
Georgetown University

March 1, 2016

Dear Members of the Georgetown University Community:

I write with great pleasure to invite you to nominate faculty for this year's President's Awards for Distinguished Scholar-Teachers at Georgetown University. With these awards, we celebrate the integration of outstanding research and the kind of excellence in teaching that is at the heart of our mission. These awards seek to recognize the most impactful among our exceptionally talented faculty.

We encourage all members of the university to submit nominations—all full-time faculty members are eligible and renominations are welcome. To submit a nomination, please send a statement of support to presidentsoffice@georgetown.edu by Friday, April 1, 2016.

While the strongest nominations will include specific examples of the integration of scholarship and excellence in teaching, we recognize that student nominations may naturally focus more on the teaching element while faculty colleagues may focus more on research. You can find more information about the nomination process and past awardees by visiting our website.

Awardees will each receive an annual grant of $10,000 for three years to support their scholarship, and will be recognized this fall at our annual Fall Faculty Convocation. Since inaugurating this award in 2013, we have had the distinct pleasure of recognizing Professors Der-Chen Chang, Richard Schlegel, James Collins, Karen Gale, Phil Schrag, Derek Goldman, and Christian Wolf.

Georgetown is blessed with the finest, most talented faculty, whose dedication—to excellence in their fields, to the formation of our students, to the ideals that animate our work—forms a cornerstone of our exceptional academic community.

I wish to express my appreciation for the role each of you plays in advancing our mission and building our community. I very much look forward to reading your nominations, and wish you all my very best for a terrific Spring Break ahead.

Sincerely,

John J. DeGioia

Good afternoon --

On Monday morning, HRC is going to speak at AIPAC (all the Republican candidates speak Monday evening). If you have time today, we'd love your thoughts on the attached draft of her speech. It's more pointedly political than some of our previous outings, but that reflects the moment we're in. We're not eager to add a lot of length here, but if you see an important issue we're missing, or a landmine we're about to step on, please let us know.

Also, please copy Oren on your responses so we can track.

Thanks very much.

Adding Carmel. I think it's fine to go forward with finance/HR and Hudson hires. I will talk to Steve to see if we can agree on a cash flow strategy including reserve, but let's not wait on that to proceed with these hires.

On Thursday, July 30, 2015, Heather Boushey <HBoushey@equitablegrowth.org> wrote:

Hello John,

I hope all is well with you. I checked in with Steve yesterday about my upcoming San Francisco trip and asked his advice as well on the budget as well, just to get another set of eyes on how the annual that he's seen before looks month-to-month. Steve said he'd take a look and get back to me soon. He is still keen on cutting us checks as we need his funds.

Thank you for pushing monthly cash flow. This is helpful for me to see on paper. I continue to think the plan is as prudent as a start-up can be and necessary if we are to go independent and do what we need to fulfill our mission and show effectiveness so we can raise funds.

But, we cannot become independent without a serious search for a finance and hr director — as these go-arounds with the budget demonstrate. Once we made the "go independent" decision, this and a development staff were my two top priorities. We have the development staff person — she's been here a week and a half and we're already moving forward — and we need this finance/hr person. We've filled the gap with a contractor to help us do the budget basics and help us do a search for a good finance/hr person, but now we're paying her to run a search that we have no approval for.

The other hires are also critical, but in different ways. With Ed spending all his time on management and the transition, and our grantees work about to (finally) come in, we are in need for an editor. David Hudson is on the market now and I need to move forward. The support for the academic programs is becoming increasingly important as our grant program has gone from no grantees to now over 30 and another tranche to set up and Korin needs help to do the outreach and support this program so that the research doesn't sit on a shelf. David Hudson will also help with the ghost-writing/editing/making the research go someplace.

All of this hiring will take time and, given what I see on the horizon, I think it's time to move forward. I'd very much like to sit down and talk budgets with you, but in the absence of time to do that, can we move forward advertising these positions?

Best,
Heather

Bank Tax Is Centerpiece of Democrats' Populist Strategy

http://online.wsj.com/article/SB10001424052748704381604575005361644727140.html?mod=googlenews_wsj

JANUARY 15, 2010, 6:55 P.M. ET

By PETER WALLSTEN

WASHINGTON—Democrats' last-minute scramble to salvage the special U.S. Senate election in Massachusetts is offering the first test of a populist pitch that party strategists hope to take to other campaigns this year.

Central to the strategy is the new White House plan to tax big banks as punishment for their role in the financial crisis. President Barack Obama announced the proposal Thursday amid reports that financial institutions bailed out by the government are enjoying healthy profits and paying generous bonuses, and as a bipartisan commission began hearing testimony on banks' role in the economic crisis.

But events Friday in Massachusetts showed how the White House and top Democrats aim to use the bank tax as a political weapon: Senate candidate Martha Coakley, Vice President Joe Biden and others used the issue to portray Ms. Coakley, who is vying to succeed the late Edward Kennedy, as tough on bank executives and portray Republican Scott Brown as coddling them.

The shift suggests Democrats view Mr. Obama's health-care overhaul, his top domestic priority and a leading issue in the contest, as a less effective political topic, and possibly even a disadvantage.

Polls show declining voter enthusiasm for Mr. Obama's health-care plan. Mr. Brown has campaigned on a promise to provide the 41st GOP vote to secure a Senate filibuster to scuttle a health-care bill.

Democratic strategists concede Mr. Obama's support in the past for a Wall Street bailout has fueled voter anger, particularly among conservatives and supporters of the antiestablishment Tea Party movement who are pouring money and volunteer hours into Mr. Brown's race.

With the bank tax, "we can take populism back to our side," a Democratic Party strategist said.

On Friday, Ms. Coakley and others invoked the bank tax in speeches and fundraising emails. A missive from Mr. Biden read, "Even though the banks received billions of dollars from American taxpayers to prevent the collapse of our financial system, Scott Brown doesn't think it's fair for us to get it back—when they're paying out billions in bonuses with our money."

One pro-Democratic group, Americans United for Change, organized a rally at which Coakley supporters waved yellow-and-black signs reading, "Scott Brown: Standing With Wall Street."

Mr. Brown he opposed the tax because it would most likely be passed on to consumers through ATM fees, among other things. He said banks would have to pay a hefty tax rather than use the money to extend much-needed loans to small businesses.

"If you're having an uphill battle selling health care in a blue state like Massachusetts, that should send shivers down the spine of Democrats looking at races across the country," said Brian Walsh, a spokesman for the National Republican Senatorial Committee.

Subject: Book chapter on Obama's final 2 years

Hey John, I'm trying this email address because it's the only one I have, and crossing my fingers that it still works.

I'm writing a chapter looking ahead to the president's final two years for a University of Virginia book helmed by Larry Sabato and published by Rowman and Littlefield. You are probably the most important person for me to talk to for a number of reasons, including your service during Bill Clinton's second term; your expertise in executive action; Obama's reported focus on climate in coming months, and the complications that will be created by 2016 Dems, led by Hillary Clinton, trying to prove they are different from Obama.

I'd love to do this in person, at the White House or over coffee (maybe in the neighborhood, if you still live in the Murch/P&P neighborhood). I could also do it on the phone. The time frame is tight -- manuscript is due early December -- so I'd need to talk in the next week or two. (Yes, I know, it's only a little busy these days over there).

Let me know what we can work out. I'm very flexible on days and times, except for Thursday this week. I'm also flexible on ground rules.

I'll give you a call if I don't hear from you in the next couple of days.

Thanks in advance,

Jill

Schneider for Congress

John, sorry for the early morning email, but this is important:

Speaker Boehner and the Republicans are set to spend over $4 MILLION to defeat Brad.

Why? With 30 days to go, our race is in a DEAD HEAT.

Republicans think with enough cash they can just buy this election for Bob Dold. If we don't respond, their strategy could work.

John, time is running out to break the tie. Can we count on you to have Brad's back?

Chip in $5 immediately >>

Chip in $35 immediately >>

Chip in $50 immediately >>

Chip in $100 immediately >>

Chip in $250 immediately >>

Or donate another amount >>

Winning this race means knocking on more doors, talking to more voters, and chipping in the resources we need to make sure we can get out the facts.

If you wait, it may be too late to make a difference.

Pitch in for Brad: <http://act.schneiderforcongress.com/Break-the-Tie>

Subject: Re: Memo on Cadillac Tax for HRC

If it does come up, here is my suggested response. If it does not come up, we'll regroup and work on a statement to get out next week:

Q: Would you repeal the Cadillac tax?

Yes, I would. While I continue to believe that we need a bold set of policies to reduce the growth of health costs that eats into workers' wages, I do not think we should pass the full burden of doing this onto the backs of consumers and workers.

The Affordable Care Act is already working to slow the growth of health spending. We have had the slowest growth in health spending in five decades.

Yet, too many Americans – who had good health insurance before and still have good insurance after the ACA – are not experiencing this downward trend in health spending. Instead they are seeing their deductibles rise, their prescription drug costs skyrocket and they don't know how to make ends meet and stay healthy.

I worry that if the Cadillac Tax is implemented, workers who have fought hard for good health insurance, simply won't have it any longer because employers will demand workers pay more and more out of pocket.

Just this week the Kaiser Family Foundation released a survey showing that the average deductible that Americans with employer based coverage have to pay before their insurance kicks in is over $1300, and has grown 7X faster than workers wages since 2010.

Now, let me be clear I do not believe that we should simply repeal the Cadillac Tax without determining how we would pay for lost revenue – this revenue is essential to helping subsidize affordable health insurance through the health exchanges and allowing the federal government to robustly help states expand Medicaid.

If Congress repeals the Cadillac Tax, it must pay for it and we must work together to reform the delivery of health care to make it more value driven and more cost efficient.

On Sep 26, 2015, at 6:10 PM, Ann O'Leary <aoleary@hillaryclinton.com> wrote:

Madam Secretary -

I wanted to be sure you saw this memo on the Cadillac Tax.

In short, we are recommending that you call for repeal but go back to your 2008 position that workers over $250K not be exempt from paying taxes on their health care. This will allow us to take in some revenue and show a consistency of your position without harming middle class workers. It would do little, however, to control health care consumption and costs.

There remains a divide among your advisors with the economic team interested in you offering a "fix it" approach (Option 3) in the memo and your political team very interested in you coming out for full repeal because of the union implications (Option 1). Several of your advisors - Neera and Chris, chief among them - offered this middle ground that Jake and I thought could work (Option 2).

Subsequently, I've talked to Randi Weingarten who has been taking the pulse of the unions in it. While she thinks they can live with the $250K position, she thinks you don't gain much from it and feels the most important thing is that you get out there not only offering empathy for workers and the cost-shifting they are experiencing but you make clear that this tax would mean health savings on the backs of workers and you won't do it that way.

If you did come out for repeal, we would recommend coupling it with strong delivery system reforms and making clear that Congress find a way to pay for it (we don't recommend having you offer the pay-for since they are actively working on it in the Senate).

Because you are going on Meet the Press tomorrow, we wanted to check in on whether you wanted to make your position clear on the show. Comms team feels that only straight up repeal would make news.

Jake and John can weigh in further and we are happy to discuss.

Thanks,
Ann

BREAKING: The Supreme Court just announced the justices will take up a once-in-a-generation case on abortion access. Click here to take action NOW.

Dear John,

It's the case that could redefine abortion access for decades to come. Texas' package of debilitating anti-choice laws—which was responsible for shuttering dozens of abortion clinics in the state—is headed to the Supreme Court.

What happens next will have ramifications to rival Roe v. Wade for millions of women and families.

Add your name if you're committed to fighting alongside us for reproductive freedom.

Targeted regulation of abortion providers (or TRAP) laws—harsh rules and regulations not levied against other medical providers—are designed by the anti-choice movement to shut down clinics, and they've been working. In Texas today, some women wait 23 days just to get an appointment!

If SCOTUS rules against us, these draconian laws will be sanctioned nationwide. Make no mistake: This could send us back to a pre-Roe era—where a dangerous, back-alley abortion was a woman's only choice.

This fight will be long and tough, and we need to know we have legions of NARAL supporters on our side. Click here to affirm you're with us for this fight.

Thank you for all you do for reproductive freedom, and for what you'll continue to do from now until abortion access is firmly protected across the country.

Hi Bob and Alan: On our steering committee call last week, John Podesta raised the issue of changing trends in the nature of work, which Bob referred to as the "casualization" of work and is sometimes called the "on-demand" economy, 1099 economy, Uberization, etc... We have been following these trends and are interested in the potential implications (e.g. on issues like the safety net, bargaining power over wages/benefits, distribution of wealth, consumer protections, etc...). The issue seems to be getting more popular media attention, but the policy landscape seems stuck in a different era.

Herb and I spoke briefly with John yesterday about what else might be done.

On the policy side, John is encouraging CAP to be more engaged, which Neera wants to do. We think CAP plans to start by doing one or more policy-oriented convenings, and then decide what else to do. I have spoken with CBPP to encourage them to reflect further on how these developments may impact the safety net policies they work on, both federally and in the states. For example, some of their key policy issues, such as the EITC, are often dependent on traditional “employment” to receive the benefits.

We’re not sure how much serious academic work is being done in this area. From the steering committee call, Alan noted that Alan Krueger is doing a paper on Uber and we know Heather hopes the RFP may yield some relevant research projects. I also plan to reach out to Rob Johnson to see if INET or its network are thinking about these topics.

We’d be interested in:

- Your thoughts on whether it would make sense to try and convene some academics on the topic, including to understand where there might be disagreement among them*
- Whether such a convening might be done through WCEG, or might be better done separately*
- Any other thoughts you may have for how to pursue this topic further in the academy, and whether it is a worthwhile pursuit*

It probably makes sense to try and have a brief call by phone, rather than do this by email. Herb and I are pretty flexible the rest of this week, and also the week of Nov 16-20. Would any times work for you in those windows? John would try and join the call, schedule permitting.

As background, if interested, here are a couple items that provide a pretty good overview of some of the issues:

Sen. Mark Warner, who is interested in the topic, wrote an op ed in the Washington Post.

The Economist had a survey piece on this topic of freelance workers that covered a broad range of issues

Thank you.

MMTC Presents: Protecting Our Cultural Brand

The Impact of Media Images on Investment in Communities of Color

Since the dawn of radio and television, minorities have been historically underrepresented in the media and entertainment industries, and they are often portrayed in a negative or stereotypical light. MMTC presents a special plenary where media experts will discuss how depictions of people of color in the film, media, and entertainment industries impact investors' perceptions of the value of investing in communities of color.

Subject: Howard Dean

Earlier, I suggested Howard Dean for HHS and someone told me that he's already in the mix. Which is great. I just spent an hour with him, and had a terrific conversation. Let me stress that I was conducting an interrogation, not being lobbied.

First, I feel even more strongly that he would be a terrific pick for HHS. It's not just that he's a physician, or that he dealt with the issues as a governor, or that he was especially innovative on health care as a governor. It is also that he has studied in detail every major health reform proposal that's come along in the past 25 years. He was a member of HRC's 1993 task force. He is a terrific combination of policy wonk and political player. Would be an effective public face in the legislative campaign. Would be loyal, I believe. Actually thinks Barack's plan is terrific because it is both politically achievable and has the right structural elements. And Howard's a good manager. Picks good people. Doesn't micromanage. Listens.

Second, I think he should be in the mix for Domestic Policy Adviser. (Is this an admission against interest?) He's enough of a policy wonk to make it work, and of course has political skills. Plus as governor he dealt with aspects of all of these issues. And through the DGA, was involved in a ton of federal policy debates. The other advantage of having him in the WH is that his breadth of interests and expertise beyond domestic policy would be useful around the senior staff table. That is, he'd be a useful kibbitzer on everything from Afghanistan to tax policy.

In the sense of using his broad expertise, DPC would be better for Howard. But HHS would make better use of his strengths as a public persona. Then again, Stu Eizenstat was a pretty good outside face under Carter -- not so much Meet the Press, but plenty of speeches. Howard would also be able to help a lot with the complex politics of the domestic policy agenda from the WH.

I hope this is helpful. Ciao.

Hi everyone

I thought it would be helpful to share what I'm hearing from labor on the Hill today with TAA/TPA and next steps.

The House will call for a vote on the rule today at 1:30pm, which if passed will punt the TAA issue thru to July 30th. Labor and the Freedom Caucus (ring wing nuts) are whipping against the rule vote. As you know its very rare for a rule vote to fail. And if this rule vote fails to extend the issue to July 30th there is talk of a separate rule vote to "deem passed". This option would be pretty controversial, but is a option being discussed.

The July 30th rule will likely pass today and when it passes the next set of discussions are around what vehicle will TAA be joined onto for final passage. There are two possibilities being discussed: 1. Highway bill, (which will make lobbying defeat very difficult for TAA/TPA opponents) 2. African Growth Opportunity Act (which would likely peel off CBC members).

From what I've heard, when whatever in the House passes it will move back to the Senate where it will likely be difficult to avoid conference.

Of course if the rule fails today, the pathway for TAA is very very difficult.

I hope this is helpful.

as a not entirely disinterested observer:

"I'm probably missing the outrage gene but the whole Clinton Foundation saga seems like a story in search of a scandal. Apparently, the Clintons have created such an effective aid organization that result-oriented donors like the Gates Foundation and Bloomberg Philanthropy give them money to distribute to worthy causes and help poor people. More than 90 cents of every dollar raised goes to deliver aid in places like Haiti, Rwanda, and countries in desperate need. And apparently, some foreign countries without effective foreign aid organizations of their own choose to donate money to the Clinton programs rather than recreate the wheel. All in all, not a bad time for the press to be getting lathered up about a non-issue but seems like less here than meets the eye."

Subject: Let students earn college credit in high school

John,

In this new economy, it's absolutely essential that young people enter the workforce armed with the skills they need to succeed. That's why I'm rolling out what I believe are innovative and cost-saving plans to help lower the cost of higher education.

Last week, I told you about my plan to lower the cost of textbooks with "open source textbooks." That plan would amount to real savings, especially when you consider that students can spend nearly $5000 over the course of a four year degree.

Here's another idea: students should be able to earn college credit while in high school. This way, by the time the student arrives at their chosen school, they already have a leg up and don't have to waste money on courses they've completed in high school.

Dual enrollment, as it's called, has the potential to save students a lot of money by allowing them to focus on classes most applicable to the profession or field they've chosen to pursue and allow them to complete a year or two of college AT NO COST to them.

This kind of progress is never easy. That's why I need your support to turn these ideas into action and continue to advance innovative ideas in Congress. Will you contribute \$5 to my campaign right now and help us reach 500 grassroots donors by the end of February?

Hi all -- here's a draft for tomorrow in Charleston. This is kind of a hybrid event -- it's got a labor angle, but there will be a bigger audience there, and SC would like her to talk more broadly about the campaign.

So this starts with a strong labor message at the start. Then it goes into the stump. There's a bit in there about Charleston and guns. Otherwise, a lot of this should look familiar to all of you. Perhaps more importantly, it tracks with what she's been saying recently so it'll look familiar to her.

I've got to get this to the book soon so please send me edits as soon as you can.

Subject: State-of-the Art Technologies and Formats for Citizen & Voter Mobilisation

Dear Mr. Podesta,

I am writing to you in your role as Chair of the Hillary Clinton Campaign as well as Founder of the Center for American Progress.

My name is Heiner Koppermann and I am the CEO of SwarmWorks, Inc., a company specializing in developing and deploying state-of-the-art technologies to constructively involve every individual in even very large live meetings.

I believe that we could make a very significant contribution to engaging and mobilizing audiences in the context of the campaign you are chairing as well as the CAP.

Using our technologies, we have supported numerous international large corporate and citizen conventions and made it possible that otherwise passive participants can actively contribute to the conference by asking questions, identifying their most burning issues, jointly developing ideas, engaging in a dialogue with speakers and much more.

That way, our products offer several applications to overcome the wide and growing disconnect between regular people and the political class.

If you are interested to further discuss what is possible using our technologies and formats, please let me know and we can arrange for a live demonstration of our capabilities.

Some relevant highlights:

In 2013, together with a political party in Germany, we developed and ran the world's largest interactive citizens' conference involving hundreds of citizens working on six separate political issues and coming up with consolidated consensual suggestions to be integrated into the manifesto of the party.
The event received > 92% extremely positive feedback even from those citizens that were card-carriers of parties different from the party organizing the conference and generated lots of positive PR for them.

In 2011, we set a new record for the largest event ever – 6,500 people – where and everyone was individually involved using one of our proprietary technologies.

A government not for the rich and powerful but accountable to you is the best frame from our research.

1 no one from Wall Street will serve in her admin

2. End the legalized bribery today. If you take a campaign contribution and change a law because of that, go to jail. She has never done that. No one else should either.

3. End practice of revolving door of members or anyone in admin. 5 yr bans maybe. I don't know what it is now. If you regulate an industry, can't go in to it later if you work for her. All will sign a pledge.

I would like to go to breakfast with you and Karen White, our political director, to get your advice as to how we should approach the transition. As you know we have a new president of NEA who is wanting to seriously transform public education during his next six years.

If I can be useful to you?

I have played major roles in two transitions for statewide in Wisconsin. Personnel and State Budget. Led a team to review state agency appointed personnel and make changes. Worked on revenue projections and budget introduction.

Arkadi and I have both talked to Neera. She didn't kill us. I assured her this was not a competitor and it would not affect her funding. Hopefully that helped.

Thank you again for coming to the meeting. Babbitt told me on the way home he had planned to vote against the equitable growth grant but you persuaded him otherwise. Thank you.

GOP blocks Wall St. overhaul

By Jim Kuhnhenn
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Undaunted by a Senate setback, Democrats appeared increasingly confident Monday they will be able to take advantage of Americans' anger at Wall Street and push through the most sweeping new controls on financial institutions since the Great Depression.

The Senate, in a 57-41 vote, failed to get the 60 supporters needed to proceed on the regulatory overhaul. One Democrat, Sen. Ben Nelson of Nebraska, joined with the Republicans.

But the evening vote was just part of a legislative ballet keeping bipartisan talks alive.

At the end, Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid switched his vote to "no," too, but that was just a maneuver that will enable him to call for a new tally as early as today.

If that failed, Reid planned another vote Wednesday.

Democrats believe that public pressure and the scent of a Wall Street scandal have given them the upper hand. Republicans have taken up the Democrats' Wall Street-bashing rhetoric and have voiced hope that a bill will ultimately pass.

In that light, the path to final approval seems clearer than it ever did during the contentious debate over health care.

would build on his legislative successes — an important political consideration in an election year.

The House has already passed its version of new bank regulations. Following the vote, the president said he was "deeply disappointed" and urged Senators to put the interests of the country ahead of party.

"Some of these senators may believe that this obstruction is a good political strategy, and others may see delay as an opportunity to take this debate behind closed doors, where financial industry lobbyists can water down reform or kill it altogether," Obama said in a statement. SENATE SETBACK

Democrats push bank controls; GOP delays action

By Jim Kuhnhenn

WASHINGTON — Undaunted by a Senate setback, Democrats appeared increasingly confident Monday they will be able to take advantage of Americans' anger at Wall Street and push through the most sweeping new controls on financial institutions since the Great Depression.

The Senate, in a 57-41 vote, failed to get the 60 supporters needed to proceed on the regulatory overhaul. One Democrat, Sen. Ben Nelson of Nebraska, joined with the Republicans.

But the evening vote was just part of a legislative ballet keeping bipartisan talks alive. At the end, Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid switched his vote to "no," too, but that was just a maneuver that will enable him to call for a new tally as early as today.

If that failed, Reid planned another vote Wednesday.

Democrats believe that public

pressure and the scent of a Wall Street scandal have given them the upper hand. Republicans have taken up the Democrats' Wall Street-bashing rhetoric and have voiced hope that a bill will ultimately pass. In that light, the path to final approval seems clearer than it ever did during the contentious debate over health care.

The financial overhaul bill is a priority of President Barack Obama and, after health care, its passage would build on his legislative successes — an important political consideration in an election year. The House has already passed its version of new bank regulations.

Following the vote, the president said he was "deeply disappointed" and urged Senators to put the interests of the country ahead of party.

"Some of these senators may believe that this obstruction is a good political strategy, and others may see delay as an opportunity to take this debate behind closed doors, where financial industry lobbyists can water down reform or kill it altogether," Obama said in a statement. "But the American people can't afford that."

In a statement, Nelson, a conservative Nebraska

Democrat, said his vote reflected concerns about the bill raised by Nebraska businessmen. Nelson and Sen. Chris Dodd, D-Conn., the chairman of the Banking Committee, huddled before the vote discussing the elimination of a provision supported by Nebraska billionaire investor Warren Buffett to exempt existing derivatives from new regulations.

The legislation would require derivatives, previously unregulated exotic securities, to be traded in open exchanges and cleared through a third party that would guarantee the instruments. A legislative agreement struck Monday would exempt existing derivatives from the clearing requirements but would still demand collateral for those trades.

"I was prepared to grandfather existing derivatives that have not been cleared, but I can't say you can't have margin requirements," Dodd said, explaining his discussion with Nelson.

Both the House and Senate bills, aimed at heading off any recurrence of the near collapse of the financial system in 2008, would create a mechanism for

Both sides in immigration fight criticize Washington

Inaction by Congress blamed for making Arizona law possible

BY PETER SALVIN

PHOENIX — On the grounds of the Capitol, in a state that only days earlier had adopted the nation's strictest anti-immigration law, the two sides of an angry debate are united on one thing: They blame Washington.

Years of congressional inaction and paralysis on immigration created a vacuum that either forced the Arizona legislature to step in or allowed overzealous lawmakers to trump federal authority, depending on whom you ask.

The law is injecting new life into the election-year debate over an issue felt strongly in the states, particularly along the Mexican border, even as Congress appears to be at an impasse over whether to consider a complex immigration bill before facing voters this fall.

President Obama came to office promising a broad overhaul of laws governing border security and how illegal immigrants are treated after they arrive in the United States. But he must decide how far to push the issue in the face of a legislative calendar crowded with a pending Supreme Court nomination and fights over financial regulation and the sweeping energy reform policy known as cap and trade. Democrats and Republicans are torn, with Senate Majority Leader Harry M. Reid (D-Nev.) using action ahead of his difficult reelection fight but others unmoved.

Three days after Gov. Jan Brewer (R) signed the bill, the parched grass surrounding the Capitol remained a political staging ground for both sides. A young woman in a "Legalize Arizona" T-shirt vied for attention with a man carrying a sign that read "You are an illegal immigrant in my country."

The law gives local police broad authority to stop and request documents from anyone they reasonably suspect is an illegal immigrant. It calls for aggressive

Suburbs trail D.C. in fighting AIDS, study says

First look at Md., Va. efforts to combat disease cites lack of coordination in jurisdictions

BY DARRYL FEARS

Suburban governments lag behind the District in efforts to help slow the spread of AIDS even though they are home to nearly half of the Washington area residents infected with the disease, according to a study released Tuesday.

In what is billed as the first look at the scope of HIV/AIDS infection in suburban Washington, the study decries the lack of coordination that it says denies thousands of infected people the medical and support services they need and deserve,

"regardless of where they live."

The study calls on local governments to establish standards so that everyone is tested for HIV during routine medical visits, unless they opt out. The study also suggests that everyone who goes to an emergency room be offered a quick mouth swab to test for the disease.

The study, funded by the Washington AIDS Partnership, shows that 46 percent of the region's more than 12,000 AIDS patients live in the suburbs; 54 percent live in the District.

In addition to those who have AIDS, about 13,000 people in the D.C. area are HIV positive. However, the infection rate in the suburbs is much lower than in the District, where 3 percent of the city's residents have HIV or AIDS — considered a major epidemic. Men having sex with men is the main mode of transmission in both areas.

"Nobody's really looked at the suburbs," said Emily Garte McKay, president of Monoclon: The Center for Nonprofit Development and Evaluation, which wrote the study. "There tends to be a big focus on central cities."

The study suggests that the suburbs can do more to fight the disease, includ-

Financial overhaul blocked by GOP

VOTES LACKING TO START DEBATE

One Democrat defects; negotiations continue

BY BRADY DENNIS AND SHAILAGH MURRAY

Republicans voted unanimously Monday to block an effort to overhaul financial regulations from reaching the Senate floor, pledging to hold out for significant changes to the bill even as they acknowledged the political risk of appearing to obstruct a popular cause.

The 57 to 41 vote in favor of beginning debate, short of the 60 needed, was expected, although Democrats did suffer an unanticipated defection when Sen. Ben Nelson (Neb.) joined Republicans as a no. Senate Majority Leader Harry M. Reid (D-Nev.) was prepared to call further votes Tuesday, Wednesday and beyond.

"We need to keep the pressure on to get a deal as quickly as possible," Reid spokesman Jim Manley said.

About two-thirds of Americans supported stricter regulations on the way banks and other financial institutions conduct their business, according to a Washington Post-ABC News poll. Majorities also backed two main components of pending Senate bill: greater federal oversight of consumer loans, and a proposed fund paid for by the financial industry that would go toward dismantling failed firms that put the broader economy at risk.

Given the public support for tougher Wall Street rules, the unanimity that Re-

Audit cites 'good faith' in crime data

City report finds figures 'substantially correct,' but samples raise questions

By STEVE THOMPSON

stthompson@dallasnews.com

A city audit of how the Dallas Police Department collects crime statistics found that the department "makes a good faith effort to comply with federal guidelines and that its numbers "appear substantially correct," according to a report released Monday by the city auditor.

But several samplings of police reports cited in the audit appear to show large rates of error in how the department classifies various types of crimes.

The audit, for instance, found that in a sample of 60 "randomly

One private auditor contacted by The Dallas Morning News said such an error rate seemed large.

GOP delays finance bill

Repeat vote is expected today on overhaul; bipartisan accord possible

FROM WIRE REPORTS

WASHINGTON — Senate Republicans, united in opposition to the Democrats' legislation to tighten regulation of the financial system, voted Monday to block the bill from reaching debate, as both sides dig in.

The battle has huge ramifications for the economy and for the parties' political prospects. Republicans said they were intent on winning substantive changes to the bill and accused the Democrats of rushing the most far-reaching overhaul of the nation's financial regulatory system since the aftermath of the Great Depression. Both sides say they expect the overhaul eventually will be approved.

But with the chief executive of Goldman Sachs, the Wall Street powerhouse accused of fraud by federal regulators, due to testify before a Senate committee today, Democrats charged that Republicans were leaving the country at risk of another financial calamity and siding with wealthy corporate interests.

The vote Monday was 57-41, as Democrats fell short of the 60 votes needed to cut off a filibuster of a motion to proceed. One Democrat, Sen. Ben Nelson of Nebraska, sided with Republicans. Two Republicans did not vote: Sens. Christopher Bond of Missouri and Robert Bennett of Utah.

At the last minute, the Senate majority leader, Harry Reid of Nevada, switched his vote to side with the Republicans — a strategic maneuver that lets him call for a repeat vote, which is expected today.

THE COLUMBUS DISPATCH

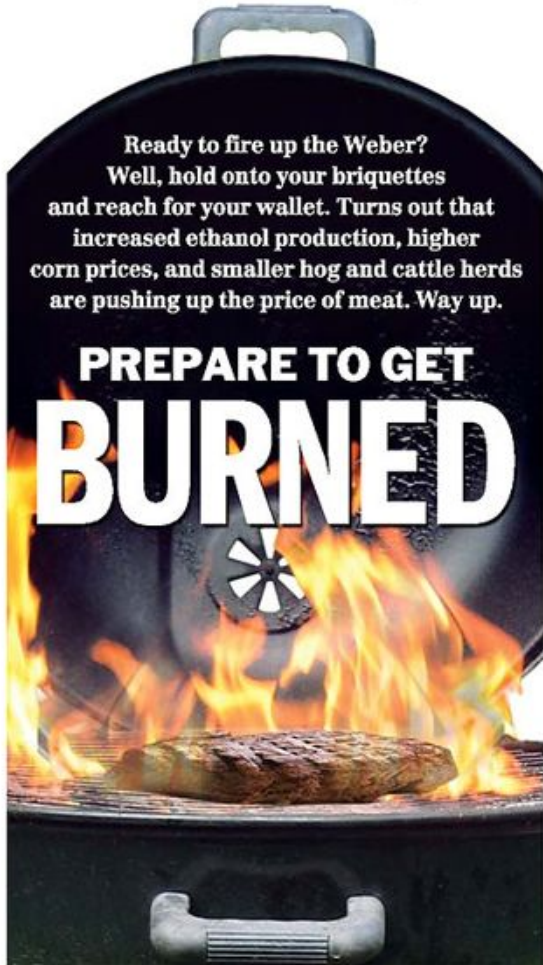

An Ohio man arrested Sunday with a gun near where the president was boarding Air Force One in North Carolina is a harmless, if overzealous, traffic-safety volunteer and ham-radio enthusiast, acquaintances say.

Joseph Sean McVey, 23, of Athens, is being held on a $100,000 bond in Asheville, N.C., where a judge set his next court date for June 10. McVey was arrested on a misdemeanor charge of "going armed in terror of the public" after a security officer noticed him with a gun in a parking lot of the Asheville Regional Airport. McVey reportedly told security officers he wanted to see the president.

A man who answered the door yesterday at the address authorities gave for McVey in Coshocton said he had no comment. Friends and relatives say McVey has since moved to Athens.

The 2005 graduate of River View High School in Warsaw in Coshocton County is known locally for his love of amateur radio and his association with volunteers who perform traffic-control duties for law enforcement and emergency personnel.

Tim Wise, president of the local Radio Emergency Association Citizen Team, or REACT, said McVey has been a member of the group since June 2008. Although club members are allowed to have amber Republicans take risk,

MACULATORY NEWSPAPERS

WASHINGTON — Senate Republicans united yesterday to delay debate on legislation that would make the most far-reaching changes in financial-industry regulation since the Great Depression — slowing but probably not stopping a bill that has been propelled by angry voters who want to crack down on Wall Street.

The 57-41 vote marked the first Senate showdown on the issue. No Republicans voted for the motion to begin debate on the bill; 60 votes were needed to end GOP delaying tactics and move the issue to the Senate floor. Sen. Ben Nelson, D-Neb., voted with the GOP.

► Goldman faces Senate critics | A3

But the impasse might be short-lived because behind-the-scenes negotiations among Democrats and Republicans are aiming to craft a compromise that could win support from Nelson and some Republicans — perhaps by the end of the week.

Yesterday's vote was largely political theater. Democrats believe the GOP will end up looking like obstructionist friends of Wall Street. Republicans welcomed the chance to present themselves as preventing hasty action and holding out for better protection of taxpayers against the excesses of high-flying financiers.

"A party that stands with Wall Street is a party that stands against families

Class action upheld in loss for Wal-Mart

Retailer to go to high court over sex-discrimination suit

STACEY ROBERTS
ARKANSAS DEMOCRAT-GAZETTE

Wal-Mart Stores Inc. will ask the U.S. Supreme Court to review a federal appeals court's decision Monday to uphold class-action status for what is the largest sex-discrimination lawsuit in United States history.

Lawyers for the Bentonville-based discount retailer said during a conference call Monday that the Supreme Court could hear the review as early as the fall.

The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in San Francisco issued a 6-5 ruling Monday stating that women who have worked for Wal-Mart since 2001 can be part of a single class action regarding the discrimination claims.

Betty Dukes, a Wal-Mart greeter in Pittsburg, Calif., first filed suit with five co-workers in 2001, and a federal judge certified it as a class action in 2004.

A three-judge panel upheld that ruling in 2007, but Wal-Mart's appeal sent it to the 11-judge panel.

The lawsuit claims that the company paid women less than men for the same jobs and did not give women the same opportunities for promotion as men. If successful, the suit could cost the world's largest retailer billions.

The 9th Circuit opinion said the district court acted within its authority in finding that it would be more productive to handle some parts of the suit in a class action rather than clogging the courts with innumerable individual suits based on similar legal points.

A dissenting opinion stated that there was no evidence to bind an initial 1.5 million plaintiffs in a single legal claim.

Judge Sandra S. Horta wrote the dissenting decision, stating that "never before has such a low bar been set for certifying such a gargantuan class."

The class certification that departs from the rules for class-action suits ignores Supreme Court mandates and precedents and neglects the rights of defendants, she wrote.

The suit, Dukes v. Wal-Mart Stores Inc., initially sought to certify female employees of the company back to December 1998.

In the decision released Monday, the 9th Circuit said the district courts could reconsider whether punitive damages and the claims of

The deaths of six people along a stretch of highway in Cambridge, Minn., leaves a community with heartache and investigators with many unanswered questions

By Maricella Miranda and Jessica Fleming

CAMBRIDGE, Minn. — Six-year-old Taylor Netzel scattered petals Monday from flowers left at the scene of the accident that killed her father.

Taylor rearranged the bouquets woven by mourners into the guardrails on a Cambridge roadside and filled with candy left in the arms of a teddy bear for Josh Netzel.

A community mourned Netzel, 24, and five others who died in a head-on two-vehicle crash early Sunday morning on Minnesota 85 near County Road 28. Three of the dead were teenagers; the teenage driver of one of the cars remained hospitalized in serious condition.

Authorities were still investigating the collision, but early evidence points to alcohol being involved.

PHILADELPHIA, PA. (AP) — The Philadelphia Inquirer is set to be sold to a group of investors, including a former owner, in a deal that could be the most dramatic in the newspaper's history.

A day of drama on eve of Inquirer auction

By Christopher K. Hepp
INQUIRER STAFF WRITER

In a day of dramatic twists and sharp exchanges in the Philadelphia Newspapers L.L.C. bankruptcy case, it was announced Monday that Raymond G. Perelman and Ronald O. Perelman, a Philadelphia father and son of wealth and renown, had joined the local investors bidding to own the newspaper company.

Perelmans added financial might to local investors' bid as Burke bowed out. Creditors' plan: 4,500 fired, some to be rehired. Futures of Daily News and Philly.com also are at stake.

The tuest moment came in a hearing before U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Stephen Raslavich when the local investors said another bidder, the largest holders of the company's debt, had a provision in its bid to terminate the company's workforce and require employees to reapply for their jobs. A lawyer for the senior lenders called the disclosure "unfair and despicable." Another lawyer representing the unsecured creditors asserted the provision was only the starting point for talks on staffing levels and compensation.

An attorney involved said such provisions are common in bankruptcy cases and Raslavich indicated nothing in the local group's proposal precluded that possibility.

The 15-month bankruptcy process moves to its most critical stage Tuesday. See NEWSPAPERS on A10

Building freeze set in East Jerusalem

The de facto action could mend U.S.-Israeli ties and boost peace talks, but also hurt Netanyahu at home.

By Amy Teibel
ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu has effectively frozen new Jewish construction in East Jerusalem, municipal officials said Monday, reflecting the need to mend a serious rift with the United States and get Middle East peace talks back on track.

The move comes despite Netanyahu's repeated assertion that he would never halt construction in East Jerusalem and risks angering hard-liners in his government.

Still, the de facto freeze appeared to offer the promise of reviving peace efforts derailed after Israel announced plans for a major Jewish housing development during a visit last month by Vice President Biden.

That set off the worst U.S.-Israeli diplomatic dispute in decades — and led the Palestinians to call off a new round of U.S.-brokered peace talks.

The quiet halting of East Jerusalem housing approvals coincides with signs that those talks are about to move ahead. Palestinian Authority President Mahmoud Abbas signaled Monday that he was ready to start indirect talks with Israel, after weeks Philadelphia's most expensive private residence is now owned by money manager Theodore R. Aronson and Barbara Berger Aronson.

Theodore, who heads AJG Partners of Philadelphia, and his wife paid $12,459,000 for the new and expansive 8,444-square-foot, 31st-floor penthouse of 1706 Rittenhouse Square Street. The deed was recorded April 2.

The previous high price for a city condo unit, $7,678,149, was paid by media mogul H. Chase Lenfest for his 5,850-square-foot, 46th-floor condo at the Residences at Two Liberty Place on March 5, 2009.

Lenfest's neighbor, unsuccessful mayoral candidate Thomas J. Knox, bought the other half of that 46th floor on July 6 for $7,521,475.

The Aronsons' purchase price is the highest ever paid for a home in Philadelphia. Eighteen months ago, chef Georges Perrier paid $2.5 million for a house in Chestnut Hill.

1706 Rittenhouse Square Street is scheduled to have its grand opening May 6. More than half of the units, which start at $3.9 million, are spoken for.

Record meat prices likely by summer

WITH SMALLER HOG AND CATTLE HERDS, WHOLESAL COSTS RISING ALREADY

By Whitney McFerron
Bloomberg News

CHICAGO — United States meat prices might rise to records this summer after farmers reduced hog and cattle herds to the smallest sizes in decades, the result of surging feed costs linked to demands for more ethanol. Wholesale pork jumped as much as 25 percent this month to 90.68 cents a pound last week, the highest since August 2008, U.S. Department of Agriculture data show. Beef climbed 22 percent this year to $1.6896 a pound Friday, the most expensive since July 2008. Chicken's gain in March was the most in 20 months.

Demand for pork chops, steaks and chicken breasts is rising as the economy improves, backyard barbecues resume, and China and Russia allow more U.S. imports. Domestic supplies might drop to a 13-year low because of culls to stem losses caused by corn prices that doubled after former President George W. Bush set targets to increase ethanol use.

"Ethanol-induced prices in meat are just now getting to the marketplace," said Steve Meyer, the president of Paragon Economics, a meat industry consultant in Des Moines, Iowa. "Consumers are going to see the highest prices they've ever paid in meat and poultry because of the decisions made to make corn into ethanol."

Retail prices might hit records in the next 90 days as demand peaks during summer grilling season, said John Naisika, a former USDA economist and the president of meat consultant Sterling Marketing Inc. in Vale, Ore. The previous records were in 2008: pork was $3.026 a pound in September, based on monthly averages tracked

FAYETTE SYSTEM WILL PAY $3.7 MILLION AWARDED TO MANER

By Jim Warren
jimwarren@herald-leader.com

Defendants have agreed to pay the $3.7 million judgment in Carol Lynne Maner's sex-abuse case against Fayette County Public Schools.

Maner, who won the judgment in 2007, said Monday she was relieved to have the case finished.

Last month, the Kentucky Supreme Court let the original judgment stand. The only other avenue available for the defense would have been to take the case to the U.S. Supreme Court.

"It's over. It's over, can you imagine?" Maner said Monday afternoon. "The insurance company decided that they weren't going to go to the Supreme Court."

Maner was referring to ACL Insurance Co. of North America, which was the Fayette schools' insurer when events in the case occurred.

Fayette County Public Schools declined comment Monday.

So ends a case that began in 2002, when Maner filed a civil suit against the Fayette school system, alleging that she was sexually abused by various teachers and school employees while a student in the late 1970s and early 1980s. She also claimed the school district did nothing to stop it.

Maner said that as a result, she was denied her right to an education, and she drifted into depression and drug addiction because of the abuse she suffered.

GOP blocks financial reform bill

ONE DEMOCRAT STANDS WITH UNITED REPUBLICAN SENATORS

New York Times Staff Writers

WASHINGTON — Senate Republicans, united in opposition to the Democrats' legislation to tighten regulation of the financial system, voted Monday to block the bill from reaching the floor for debate, as both sides dug in. The battle has huge ramifications for the economy and for their political prospects in this year's midterm elections.

Republicans said they were intent on winning substantive changes to the bill and accused the Democrats of rushing the most far-reaching overhaul of the nation's financial regulatory system since the aftermath of the Great Depression. Both sides say they expect the overhaul will be approved eventually.

But with the chief executive of Goldman Sachs, the Wall Street powerhouse accused of fraud by federal regulators, due to testify before a Senate committee Tuesday, Democrats charged that Republicans were leaving the country at risk of another financial calamity and siding with wealthy corporate interests.

Sensing political momentum at a time of deep public anger at Wall Street, Democratic leaders said they would keep the regulatory bill on the floor — and delay the rest of their busy legislative agenda — to ratchet up the pressure on the Republicans.

Combined with signs of economic recovery in many parts of the country, Democrats said they thought the fight over financial regulation could help turn the tide of anti-incumbent sentiment that has them heading for substantial losses in November.

"We are as vulnerable as we are today in the waning days of April 2010 as we were in the fall of 2008," said Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn. and chairman of the banking committee, who is the primary sponsor of the legislation. "Nothing has changed, except, of course, jobs have been lost, homes have gone into foreclosure, retirement incomes have evaporated, housing values have declined."

Financial overhaul bill hits GOP wall

TOUGHER ROAD AHEAD FOR 1ST-TIME DWIs

• The Minnesota House voted unanimously to authorize the use of breath-activated ignition systems for some first-time drunken drivers.

By RICHARD MERTHWICH
rthm@startribune.com

In an effort to catch up with the rest of the country, the Minnesota House voted unanimously Monday to authorize the use of breath-activated ignition systems for some first-time DWI offenders.

Under the bill, approved by a 138-0 vote after less than 10 minutes of discussion, repeat offenders and first-timers with high blood-alcohol levels would be required to install the breath-activated devices on their vehicles before they could drive.

"It was time for us to address this issue," said Rep. Kim Norton, DFL-Rochester. "Day after day you read it in the paper that drinking and driving has caused another death."

Altogether, 47 states have some type of ignition interlock law. Twelve states require first-time offenders to use the devices regardless of blood-alcohol content.

The House bill stops short of Gov. Tim Walle's original proposal and a companion bill making its way through the Senate. But advocates said the unanimous vote suggests legislators will ultimately embrace the technology this year.

"The Senate has always been more receptive to traffic safety bills than the House has," said Nancy Johnson, legislative director for Minnesota's Safe Driving.

The main difference in the two bills is the threshold at which the new technology would become mandatory. Under the House bill, drivers who register a blood-alcohol level of 0.2 percent or higher would be required to use the devices, vs. 0.15 under the Senate bill. The Senate also is ex-

GOP blocks debate on financial overhaul

• The showdown on the Senate floor has as much to do with bill's specifics as it does the midterm elections.

and EDWARD WYATT • New York Times

WASHINGTON • Senate Republicans, united in opposition to the Democrats' legislation to tighten regulation of the financial system, voted Monday to block the bill from reaching the floor for debate.

As both sides dug in, the battle has huge ramifications for the economy and for each party's political prospects in this year's midterm elections.

Credit crunch Republicans pledged to hold out for significant changes to the bill even as they acknowledged the political risk of appearing to obstruct a popular cause. They accused the Democrats of rushing the most far-reaching overhaul of the nation's financial regulatory system since the aftermath of the Great Depression.

Democrats charged that Republicans were leaving the country at risk of another financial calamity and siding with wealthy corporate interests.

Both sides, however, say they expect the overhaul eventually will be approved.

Sensing political momentum at a time of deep public anger at Wall Street, Democratic leaders said they would keep the

GOP stalls finance-reform bill

Republicans say they want better measure; deal expected

"Common Sense" mimics Dems' soft-cash system

By Jessica Fender The Denver Post

Republican operatives have started duplicating the political fundraising and organizational structure that catapulted state Democrats to power in 2004 and has helped keep them there since.

A PowerPoint presentation obtained by The Denver Post details the formation for Republicans of an outside-the-party umbrella organization called Common Sense Colorado, which hopes to direct $20 million to loosely affiliated conservative political groups.

A network of at least a half-dozen entities has taken shape in the past 16 months. And while there are no records with the secretary of state's office showing what they've raised so far, the presentation puts that total at $700,000 from a handful of corporate and industry donors, with prospects for $8.5 million.

The documents describe a "formal structure that controls all soft money efforts in Colorado" that's overseen by "political managers, business executives and attorneys to ensure full compliance."

But the lawyer who's helping establish the mass of nonprofit corporations and 527 political advocacy groups said the entities tied to Common Sense Colorado are just the tip of the conservative, soft-money iceberg.

"This is just one set of entities. This is 20 percent overall of what people are doing out there," said Jon Anderson, a lawyer with Holland and Hart and former chief legal counsel to Gov. Bill Owens. "There are a ton doing this sort of thing. There are so many entities out there

Richardson, 52, was one of five candidates

Richardson planned to run with campaign

Clean Election candidates had until April 1

School board trims funding for consultants

Cutting $109,000 holds a proposed property tax increase to 1 percent, but some residents say that's not enough.

By KELLEY BOURCHARD

PORTLAND — The School Committee stands to have $109,000 less to spend on outside consultants in the coming school year, based on a final budget-cutting vote that the committee took Monday night.

The unanimous vote reduced the proposed school budget to $48.9 million and reduced the amount of property taxes to be raised to $47.4 million.

That's a 1 percent increase over this fiscal year's $46.7 million property tax levy for Portland's public schools.

"We wanted to keep the impact as far as possible from students," said Peter Eggleston, the committee chairman, after the vote.

Last week, the City Council's Finance Committee asked municipal and school officials to cut at least $475,000 from their combined $216 million budget for the fiscal year starting July 1.

Jill Dusen and other emulators said they wanted an overall budget proposal that requires a tax increase of less than 1 percent.
While school officials said they have done their fair share to reach that goal, some residents at Monday's meeting at City Hall

PORTLAND — This is a week of hard choices for city and school officials as they work to balance Portland's budget while minimizing tax increases for the fiscal year that starts July 1.

Amidst the City Council's Finance Committee wants property taxes to increase by no more than 1 percent. That could mean further cuts to schools and municipal services.

City Manager Joe Gray has proposed a $194 million municipal budget, which would eliminate 40 positions and add 14 percent to the municipal portion of the tax rate. The School Committee has proposed an $89.9 million budget, which would eliminate 41.5 positions and increase taxes by 1 percent.

For a tax increase of 0.9 percent — below the Finance Committee's threshold — school and city officials will have to identify $475,000 in cuts or find new revenue, such as tapping into Food tracing follows seed to store

Regulators' concerns over food safety, consumer interest fuel push toward transparency.

SPRINGFIELD, MO. • The Askinosie Chocolate factory sits at the edge of a downtown street in southwest Missouri, but its flavor comes from thousands of miles away, and its customers can find out where — exactly.

Each Askinosie chocolate bar bears a "chose-o-lot" code, a series of numbers that customers can plug into the company's website revealing where the cocoa beans in that bar were grown and who grew them. The idea is to introduce customers to the farmer in Ecuador, Mexico or the Philippines who cultivated the bar's essential ingredient.

"I wanted to profit-share with farmers," said Shawn Askinosie, explaining the founding principle of his company. "You can't profit-share with people if you don't know who they are. If I was serious about it, I knew I would have to trace the chocolate from the bean to the bar."

In the food industry, this ability to track an ingredient from origin to destination is known as traceability, and for Askinosie, it lies at the heart of his operating philosophy. But with hundreds of people sickened by food-borne illness in a spate of recent outbreaks, traceability has also become a critical food industry goal.

"They have to get better at it,"

See TRACE • Page A3

TRACEABILITY EXAMPLES

• Frito-Lay Inc. launched a "chip tracker" last year on its Lay's potato chips. It allows customers to enter their ZIP codes and digits from packages onto the company's website. The site then tells customers where their chips were made.

• In 2009, Driscoll's, the California-based berry grower, put 12-digit codes on all of its packaging, allowing customers to track berries to the fields where they were grown.

• FreshExpress, a lettuce grower, launched a "leaf locator" program last month that enables customers to see where the lettuce was grown and how it is taken care of, from field to store.

Riverview Gardens watches the clock

Unaccredited • After three years, state must intervene.

June deadline • Elected board likely to be removed.

BY DAVID HUNN

BELLEFONTAINE NEIGHBORS • Those who care about the Riverview Gardens School District have watched test scores fall over the past decade, finances sink, a superintendent go to prison, and the state declare that the district is no longer worthy of its endorsement.

Now they're bracing for something of a final judgment.

Riverview has been unaccredited by the state for three years. By the end of June, the state is obligated to intervene. It could remove the elected board and replace it with an appointed panel. It could merge the district into another in north St. Louis County. Or it could dissolve the district entirely.

"The clock is ticking on Riverview," said Jim Morris, spokesman for Missouri's Department of Elementary and Secondary Education. "If nothing changes, we do not have to take any other action for the wheels to be set in motion."

Those close to the process expect the state board to remove Riverview's seven elected board members and replace them with a Special Administrative Board, as it did recently in the St. Louis Public and Wellston districts.

The decision would mark the fourth time in five years that the state has removed an elected school board or closed down a district due to its troubled academic and financial performance.

It would also signal the state's increasing willingness to intervene in local school leadership. Late last week, for instance, the state board was given a report listing 10 districts that, if reviewed today, would be unaccredited — a marked increase from years past.

GOP puts up roadblock on finance reform bill in Senate

Tactic may be short-lived as bipartisan efforts continue behind scenes.

BY JANET HOOK

Tribune Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON • Senate Republicans united Monday to block debate on legislation that would make the most far-reaching changes in financial industry regulation since the Great Depression — slowing but probably not stopping a bill that has been propelled by angry voters who want to crack down on Wall Street.

The 57-41 vote marked the first Senate showdown over the issue. No Republicans voted for the motion to begin debate on the bill; 60 votes were needed to end GOP delaying tactics and move the issue to the Senate floor. Sen. Ben Nelson of Nebraska, a Democrat, joined in the opposition.

But the impasse may be short-lived because behind-the-scenes negotiations among Democrats and Republicans are aiming to craft a compromise that could win back Nelson and some GOP converts — perhaps by the end of the week.

Monday's vote was largely political theater. Democrats believe the GOP will end up looking like obstructionist friends of Wall Street. Republicans welcomed the chance to present themselves as preventing hasty action and holding out for better protection of taxpayers against the excesses of high-flying financiers.

"A party that stands with Wall Street is a party that stands against families and fairness," said Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev., who switched his vote to 'no' at the last minute in order to ask for Monday's vote to be revisited later this week.

Senate Republican leader Mitch McConnell of Kentucky, for his part, said the GOP was opposing the motion to begin debate because it believed the Democrats' plan did not do enough to ensure that the government would not again foot the bill for bailing out institutions deemed "too big to fail."

A vote to block the bill from coming to the floor is "a vote for bipartisanship, for working out an iron-clad solution to the problem of too big to fail," McConnell said.

After the vote, President Barack Obama issued a statement saying he was "deeply disappointed" that Republicans voted to block the bill.

Advocates for deaf sue over mental health care

ST. LOUIS • After Sheri Cerame's son was assaulted, suffered post-traumatic stress disorder and became a potential threat to himself and others, his parents followed a psychiatrist's advice and took him to a residential mental health facility.

Within an hour, they said, a nurse tried to strap on a strait-jacket because of the "flailing hands" of the then-17-year-old boy, who is deaf and cannot speak.

That flailing — Cerame's son's attempt to communicate by using sign language — is emblematic of a systemic statewide problem in Missouri, advocates for the deaf said Monday after filing a lawsuit aimed at fixing it.

Subject: Another shutdown?

Dear Friend,

In our office, we stay focused on delivering results for Coloradans. Nothing has been more disruptive to that process than when Tea Party extremists shut down the government last year.

The shutdown cut off basic services to Coloradans and Americans, took $24 million out of our economy, and temporarily put 800,000 people - including more than 40,000 workers in Colorado - out of work, delaying their paychecks. All of this damage came while families are working their way back from the worst recession since the great depression. That is unacceptable.

Yet, less than a year later, some extremists are at it again. They've put another shutdown on the table this year and are threatening more shutdowns in years to come.

The American people deserve better than a Senate that goes all-in on shutdown politics. Stand up against another shutdown and help us hit our $35,000 goal with a $5 contribution.

Or donate another amount.

The shutdown was bad for the country. No one won, with the possible exception of the extremists who think it's a good idea to take $24 billion out of Americans' pockets.

We warned that the shutdown would be a disaster, but the extremists didn't listen. After the dust had settled, they said they'd learned their lesson. Today, that doesn't appear to be the case.

Washington shutdowns hurt Colorado families, and we can't afford another one. Help us keep fighting for a Washington that works by giving \$5.

Thanks for your support.

Dear John

It was nice to meet you at the London fundraiser for Hillary on Monday. Further to our brief chat, I'd be happy to meet with the technology team in New York between 25-28 May to discuss how we can use Ven digital currency to enable single click micro-payments and other fundraising activities for the campaign.

As we discussed, Bitcoin is being used on the Republican side and could be a useful tool, but we think Ven is a better choice for your campaign due to its environmental benefits, identity metrics and closed loop status. The FEC has indicated that digital currencies are acceptable for donations in campaigns.

More on Ven here: <http://ven.vc> and in snapshot attached.

In DC, I'm coping in Dan and Karen and Albright Stonebridge - we are working closely with their firm, as well as Edelman in New York.

Best
Stan

Subject: RE: A Plan

Tom and I just spoke and I believe we are in agreement that by COB tomorrow I will have a series of documents that includes: The McCain piece listed below, a 2-pager on the strategy, a reel with 5 ads, and a document which outlines where and how the funds will be spent -- essentially a 60 day media plan.

I will assume that when I get this document the c4 team will have already approved it (Susan, David, Steve, and Paul). I will then wait for sign-off from John that he approves this plan. At that point, I will go out with a very specific ask to our current soft commitments and other prospects to raise XX dollars on this plan to be spent over the next 60 days on media.

Hopefully, this process works for everyone. Please e-mail me if you don't agree and we can work out a different process for moving this forward. If I don't hear from you in response to this I will assume you are in agreement.

Additionally, we will set-up a donor up-date call for next week.

Thanks for all of your help!!

I know and this is in my court right now. My team stayed late last night and we're staying late tonight. The pieces we're putting together include: ad reel, 25 reasons McCain is bad, "plan powerpoint" and a 2-pager on the plan.

is that sufficient?

I know I am sounding like a pest, but these people have now been waiting for information for weeks and frankly it makes us look bad that we would solicit them for seven figure gifts and not be able to show them a plan or a budget for how we are going to spend it.

I know we are all focused on a million things, but we MUST get these people the information before too much time elapses! We will lose their interest!

Long time, no talk, Friend.

It's been a couple weeks since I emailed you last, so I wanted to let you know what I've been up to:

- We've put a lot of miles on the car — visiting every corner of the Commonwealth, talking to voters and finalizing my policy agenda.
- Meeting a lot of people who volunteered for Sen. Kaine & President Obama last year, who are getting involved again this year. They liked the feeling they got on November 6, 2012 and want to experience it again.
- Making sure we build on the momentum of our successful first quarter and hit our $75,000 April fundraising goal.

But we're still $21,913.45 away from hitting that goal — and the deadline is tomorrow.

Will you pitch in $5 and make sure we don't fall short?

<https://donate.terrymcauliffe.com/the-april-deadline>

We're off to a great start in the campaign, and we've got some exciting announcements in the coming weeks — stay tuned! But we need to hit this critical goal first.

Thanks for having my back,

Terry

Dear Friends,

As some of you know, my sister Mai passed away unexpectedly last month. For those of you who knew Mai, I thought you'd like to see the link to the obituary in this week's MacLeans magazine, and for those who didn't, I think it captures her pretty well. Mai was a lot of fun and taught me a great deal over the years, and her death has taught me that there is no shame in mental illness.

I hope you're all doing well,

Joe

<http://www.macleans.ca/society/life/mai-thi-ngoc-tran-cashion-1974-2014/>

Mai Thi Ngoc Tran Cashion, 1974-2014

A child of the Vietnam War, she survived Operation Babylift. In a search for inner peace she was a nanny, Buddhist and dog walker.

Read more...

Mai Thi Ngoc Tran Cashion was born in Vĩnh Long, Vietnam, on July 25, 1974. Her parents are listed as "unknown" on her birth certificate, and what became of them is lost to history.

Decent record-keeping was a casualty in the last, tumultuous days of the Vietnam War. Countless Vietnamese and Vietnamese-American children were orphaned, abandoned, or separated from their families.

Eight-month-old Mai was evacuated in the U.S. government's Operation Babylift, which transported about 3,300 children from South Vietnam to adoptive parents around the world.

The first flight out—in a C-5A Galaxy built for transporting tanks, not infants—departed on April 4, 1975. Not long after takeoff, the rear cargo door blew off at 23,000 feet, forcing the pilot to crash-land in a rice paddy. More than 150 people died, including at least 78 children.

Meanwhile in Fredericton, N.B., Peter and Marie Cashion, a biochemist and a special education professor, sat stunned in front of the television. They'd already bonded with the little girl they planned to adopt, though all they had of Mai was a snapshot.

The adoption agency confirmed their fears: Mai was on the doomed flight. Thirty-six children aboard were headed to families in Canada. Eighteen had survived, but the agency didn't know if Mai was among them. The following evening, Marie recalls nursing a gin and tonic, seized by anxiety, when the call came. Mai was alive and on her way home.

Early on, their baby seemed shell-shocked and passive. She wouldn't roll over or grasp a toy.

It didn't last. Mai was surrounded by loving parents and two siblings, Peter Jr., 5, and Amy, 3, who were overjoyed to have a sister. The listless toddler blossomed into a voracious reader and an outgoing, whip-smart tomboy with incredible soccer finesse.

Mai and her brother Joe, two years her junior, roamed streets and backyards in Fredericton with neighbourhood kids. She was a natural ringleader and could command a crowd.

"There was no one better at being bad," Joe remembers.

The family bred golden retriever puppies in their garage. That was the beginning of Mai's love for animals, one constant in her life of near-constant change.

She was a teen when depression reared, for the first of many times.

That kicked off a long period of journeying, seeking, searching. Nobody knew what for, maybe not even Mai.

She started university twice, dropping out each time. She turned her sights west to Banff, where she befriended the owner of a vegetarian restaurant and traded meals for dishwashing duty. Tiring of that, at age 20 she bought a motorcycle and rode it all the way home to Fredericton.

Mai's best friend, Anna Silk, begged her to take a breath.

"She threw herself fully into whatever she was doing, but she was very extreme," Anna says. "She took a lot of things to heart. She was so sensitive to the world."

In 1996, Marie and Mai travelled to Vietnam, digging for Mai's roots but turning up nothing. Mai stayed for a year teaching English. Then she became a nanny in Belgium for a year. After that, she took a job as a model in Spain for a while.

Mai's capacity to shock was bottomless. In late 1998 she joined a Buddhist monastery in France. The $25,000 or so she had from a fund for Babylift survivors was divvied up among her friends. The next year, she appeared at Peter Jr.'s wedding sporting a long nun's gown and a shaved head.

Mai left the cloistered life after three years, but she never gave up searching for inner peace.

In 2004, she settled in Montreal. She found work with an insurance company, which didn't suit her. She earned a black belt in Kung Fu. Channeling her oldest passion, she started a dog walking business.

She never married or had children and never wanted to. Instead, she forged fierce friendships with just about anyone who crossed her path.

During a recent visit to Montreal, Peter Jr. waited for Mai outside her apartment while she checked in with a nearby homeless man.

"It was, 'Hey Mai, how's it going?' 'Hi Larry, how are you doing?' " he recalls with a laugh.

In Montreal Mai acquired one of her dearest friends, a Boston Terrier named Wiggles.

She brought the dog along when, suffering from some health problems and a vengeful relapse into depression, Mai moved back in with her parents just before Christmas 2013. She attempted suicide in May and spent some time in hospital.

On June 17, Mai told her parents she was spending the night with a friend. The friend left for a night shift, and Mai left sometime afterwards, letting him believe she'd gone home. Her parents reported her missing the next day.

For the second time in their lives, Peter and Marie Cashion went to bed not knowing if their daughter was dead or alive. But this time when they received a call, the news was bad. On June 21, 2014, police found Mai's body in Fredericton's Odell Park. She had taken her own life. She was 39.

One clarification that I didn't get quite right below: the budget is for 2016, so this is the one that the Sandlers have approved. The CAP board only approved our 2015 budget. Therefore, the new hires we have planned will not match what CAP finance has. Perhaps this is more for John, then, that the budget is derived from what the Sandlers and he have seen.

Please do let me know whether we will be able to do this grant application and meet the Wyss timetable.

Hello Carmel,

Last night, Matt Hollamby from the Wyss Foundation said they wanted a $500k grant proposal from Equitable Growth and it's due Monday. I did not have advance notice on this — he and I had been trying to find a time to talk for over a month — but there was no sense of urgency on his part or notice. Had I expected this outcome, we would have given CAP notice and done some advance work. As is, my team will be here over the weekend to make this happen.

As you know, we’ve applied for our 501(c)3 status and now we are expediting that process. Wyss would like to fund us in our new status if it comes through by November?. However, we need to apply from CAP’s tax status and I realize you then have responsibility until we are independent.

Our contract budget person, Debbie Feinberg, is putting the proposal budget together, based entirely using the budget that the CAP board approved in July.

Can we discuss how to expedite CAP approvals from Legal, Finance, and Neera so we can make this happen?

Best,
Heather

Dear John and Eryn –

Thank you both so much for squeezing us in yesterday in the midst of John's busy schedule. Our state advisors, funders, faculty and staff truly appreciated John's engagement, and John's remarks touched many themes that we had been discussing all morning about what we can best do to play a positive role at the nexus of state and federal policy on the power plan, resilience, transportation, and on engaging at the community level as well.

I look forward to seeing John soon as I'll be coming with a group (led by Kathleen Welch) to the White House tomorrow morning to discuss convenings around the power plan across regions.

Once again, thanks so much for your hard and great work and for your generous engagement with the states and Georgetown!

All best,

Vicki

Subject: Re: Bankruptcy follow up

Just to be really clear about what the women Senators would be saying... we are trying to get them to make the point that HRC was NOT an outlier voting with Wall Street, but rather than they all were working together to try to make improvements to the bill for women and children and so strategically moved the bill forward and then all the liberal Dems voted against it when it came back in 2005 (as HRC would have done and put out a statement out but for WJC's heart attack).

We are NOT, however, re-litigating whether we made enough progress on women and children issues to justify the vote..... but I think it is critical that we make really, really clear that HRC was not alone.

I will get up and get on 8 am ET call in case there are questions and I'll try to get the Mikulski and Murray statements before then so we at least know what they'd be saying if we need to or want to deploy.

On Sun, Feb 7, 2016 at 10:38 PM, Mandy Grunwald <gruncom@aol.com> wrote:

I understand why HRC wants the statements in hand, and we may well need them to back us up for Thursday's debate, but if we put them out, we should all be clear that we will inflame Senator Warren further.

As Ann knows, Elizabeth believes the facts are simply not on our side and she has a very good case that we do not want her to feel pressed to make to the media.

If we can deal with tomorrow's stories without putting out Sen Murrays statement and/or Sen Milkulskis (if we get one), it would be preferable.

I probably won't be on the 8 am call, I'm taking an 8:30 plane. Heading back to NH.
If anyone has questions, they can call me now.

Hi all -

Here is a full update on where we are:

(1) Mikulski, Murray and Boxer - Talked to all three of COSs. Mikulski and Murray COSs are reaching out to their bosses to ask them to do supportive statement and make clear that we all were working to make changes for women and children and voted to move the bill forward and work to continue to strengthen it. Boxer didn't vote because of a family situation, but unfortunately told the LA Times that she would have voted against it. So we shouldn't proactively put her out there, but if asked or called upon she will praise HRC for the work they did on the credit card amendment and make clear that she understands why all of the other women Democratic Senators voted for the bill.

(2) Women's Groups - We cannot put something out proactive here b/c the record just isn't good. But, if called, Judy and Marcia are also prepared to say that Hillary fought really hard for changes, was with the other women Senators, and committed to keep working with them to strengthen the bill. Here are the statements that they put out in 2001 that don't help us:

<https://web.archive.org/web/20010711180022/http://www.nwlc.org/details.cfm?id=637§ion=newsroom>

So next steps - waiting for final sign off from Mikulski and Murray. Also, Tony, their team wants any statements they made in 2005 too and wants to confirm they voted against it when it came back.

Jen/Kristina - Do you need to get this out tonight or is tomorrow morning ok? Both COS are working to get them on record today, but both Senators are in home districts doing events.

Thanks,
Ann

Here is Murray's floor statement. Mulkski does not appear to have made one

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, I rise to express my support for the bankruptcy reform legislation. This legislation offers an imperfect but fairly balanced approach to reforming the bankruptcy system. Through the amendment process we have improved the bill, but it could be more fair to all sectors of our society. I am disappointed some good amendments that would have improved the legislation were rejected. The bankruptcy reform legislation that passed the House a couple of weeks ago is less friendly to individuals in adverse circumstances not of their own doing. If this bankruptcy reform bill is weakened in conference, I will have a hard time supporting it. I will likely oppose a conference agreement that looks at all like the House bill. In recent years, consumer bankruptcy filings have dramatically increased. We debated bankruptcy reform in the last two Congresses. Those discussions showed our desire to elevate personal responsibility in consumer financial transactions; to prevent bankruptcy filings from being used by consumers as a financial planning tool; and, to recapture the stigma associated with a bankruptcy filing. It is clear the system is broke, and bankruptcy reform is needed. I voted for bankruptcy reform in both the 105th and 106th Congresses, and I plan to vote for this bill. Despite these votes, I have reservations about how the unintended consequences of this bill will affect the less fortunate. The bill will have an enormous impact on women and child support. The largest growing group of filers are women, usually single mothers. The bill's overall philosophy of pushing debtors from chapter 7 to chapter 13 will have an unintended effect on women. They usually have fewer means and are more susceptible to crafty creditors seeking to intimidate and reaffirm their debts. They need the protection of chapter 7, but could be pushed into chapter 13. Women will also be disadvantaged by provisions in this bill that fail to prioritize domestic obligations. Under the provisions of this bill, women will find themselves competing with powerful commercial creditors for necessary resources, such as past-due child support, from spouses who are in bankruptcy. It is unfair to place the critical needs of families and single mothers trying to survive behind those of wealthy commercial creditors. Another problem with this bill is the new filing requirements are very complex, which could result in unintended discrimination against lower-income individuals and families. Many low-income families don't have the means to combat most creditors. Because debtors must prove they are filing for legitimate reasons, those without the means to combat powerful commercial interests will be placed at an unfair disadvantage. I was also disappointed that the U.S. Senate failed to adopt some very good amendments that would have significantly improved the bill. Senator KOHL offered an amendment that would have limited the practice of wealthy debtors shielding themselves from creditors in bankruptcy behind State homestead exemption laws that allow them to shelter large amounts of money in a new home. His amendment would have placed a national cap on this exemption, and limited the abusive practice of sheltering large amounts of money in large homes. I supported this needed amendment, but it was rejected on the floor of the Senate. Several amendments were also offered that would have restricted the marketing to and use of credit cards by young people. Credit card companies are aggressively marketing to young people, and many young people are getting into massive debt. Companies should only be allowed to offer credit cards to those who can pay for them. Finally, I am disappointed that amendments were rejected that would have limited predatory lending practices. Some of these predatory loans can have interest rates over 100%. I was pleased to see that the bill included language to end the practice of using the bankruptcy code to escape civil punishment for violence, intimidation or threats against individuals using family planning services. This provision was added in the Judiciary Committee and greatly improves the bill. It ensures that those who violate the law cannot escape justice through the bankruptcy laws. This critical provision of this bill that must not be stripped or drastically changed in conference. Overall, this is a decent bill that will improve on the current abuses of the bankruptcy system. While I have concerns over many of this bill's provisions, I hope they can be dealt with in conference or in future legislation. This bill should be strengthened in conference, not weakened as has happened to other versions of bankruptcy legislation. I will closely examine a conference agreement with this in mind before voting to send this legislation to the President. Congressional Record, [3/15/01]

ELIZABETH WARREN: She voted in favor of it.

BILL MOYERS: Why?

ELIZABETH WARREN: As Senator Clinton, the pressures are very different. It's a well-financed industry. You know a lot of people don't realize that the industry that gave the most money to Washington over the past few years was not the oil industry, was not pharmaceuticals. It was consumer credit products. Those are the people. The credit card companies have been giving money, and they have influence.

BILL MOYERS: And Mrs. Clinton was one of them as senator.

ELIZABETH WARREN: She has taken money from the groups, and more to the point, she worries about them as a constituency.

BILL MOYERS: But what does this mean though to these people, these millions of people out there whom the politicians cavort in front of as favoring the middle class, and then are beholden to the powerful interests that undermine the middle class? What does this say about politics today?

ELIZABETH WARREN: You know this is the scary part about democracy today. It's... We're talking again about the impact of money. The credit industry on this bankruptcy bill has spent tens of millions of dollars lobbying, and as their profits grow, they just throw more into lobbying for how they can get laws that will make it easier and easier and easier to drain money out of the pockets of middle class families.

Sen. Clinton's Campaign:

DEMOCRATS PONDER PRIMARY DO-OVERS IN FLORIDA, MICHIGAN. The Politico (3/7) blogger Ben Smith reports, "A climactic showdown over counting the votes of Democrats in Florida and Michigan is fast descending into a round of haggling over who will pay to re-run those states' primaries. ... The details of re-votes in those two states remain uncertain, as relatively weak political players spent the day calling on one another to take action. Democratic National Committee Chairman Howard Dean demanded that the state parties sort it out on their own. Florida Sen. Bill Nelson, in turn, called on Dean to take charge. ... Top officials in both Florida and Michigan said the mechanics of the primaries are becoming clear. In Florida, officials favor a primary conducted by mail. In Michigan, the likely solution is a 'firehouse caucus,' a process with fewer locations and shorter hours than a primary, but more open and flexible to voters than caucuses elsewhere."

The Financial Times (3/7, Luce) reports, "Hillary Clinton on Thursday made headway towards reinstating the excluded delegates from Michigan and Florida, in a move that is likely to add to the fissile atmosphere between her campaign and that of Barack Obama. ... After pressure from the Clinton campaign, Howard Dean, the chairman of the Democratic National Committee, said on Thursday he would be open to allowing both states to restage their primary elections in June but at their own expense."

The New York Times (3/7, Broder, 1.18M) reports, "With the two Democratic presidential candidates in near-deadlock and battling for every delegate, party leaders and the rival campaigns started searching in earnest on Thursday for a way to seat barred delegations from Florida and Michigan. But they remained deeply divided over how to do so. ... Much remains to be settled. Among the issues are what kind of contests to hold, when to hold them, how to allocate the delegates and, critically, who picks up the multimillion-dollar tab in each state. ... In a sign of growing involvement by party leaders, Speaker Nancy Pelosi met privately Thursday with [Clinton adviser Harold] Ickes and Maggie Williams, Mrs. Clinton's campaign manager, and discussed, among other topics, the Florida and Michigan primary problem, the tone of the campaign and the role of superdelegates." The two campaigns "are talking through surrogates and party leaders about a variety of options."

The Washington Post (3/7, A1, Balz, 723K) reports on its front page, "The stakes are huge." As a result, "Elected officials from Michigan and Florida have called on the national committee to relent, arguing that to do otherwise means disenfranchising several million voters from two battleground states. DNC Chairman Howard Dean has been equally firm in arguing that changing the rules could split the party and undermine confidence in the entire nominating process." So far, "there is more stalemate than progress."

The Los Angeles Times (3/7, Nicholas, Finnegan, 881K) reports that "prominent Democrats are floating possible solutions that would include new presidential nominating contests in Florida and Michigan, or a compromise forged by a special committee of party elders. ... One alternative mentioned now by the Florida Democratic Party is a vote-by-mail election. ... With no consensus in sight, some officials said it was time to convene a committee of party elders. Rep. Emanuel Cleaver II (D-Mo.) said that he was so worried about Democratic infighting over the election that he was urging Dean to appoint such a panel to recommend a strategy to resolve the disputes."

Financing Elections Emerging As Hang Up. The CBS Evening News (3/6, story 8, 2:30, Cordes, 7.66M) reported, "There was more talk today about primary do-overs ... But nobody wants to be stuck with the tab." ABC World News (3/6, story 5, 2:30, Tapper, 8.78M) reported, "Another fight consuming the Democratic Party during this campaign with no clear end in sight is whether Florida and Michigan can hold re-votes ... So far, no one is willing to foot the $15 million to $20 million bill. Late news on this story, Senator Clinton has told US News and World Report that she opposes any attempt to have a revote in Florida. And she 'will not accept a caucus' in Michigan. She, of course, has lost 13 of the 15 caucuses so far this year. For his part, Senator Obama says he will abide by whatever the Democratic Party decides."

NBC Nightly News (3/6, story 5, 2:15, Mitchell, 9.87M) reported, "No one is willing to pay for new elections in Michigan and Florida possibly costing $25 million. And today Michigan's Democratic governor ruled it out for her state."

Florida Gov. Charlie Crist was asked on CNN's The Situation Room (3/6, Blitzer) about Sen. Bill Nelson's suggestion that the Democratic National Committee pay for a Democratic presidential primary in Florida. Crist replied, "I wouldn't oppose that at all. ... The difficulty we have for our Florida taxpayers paying for it is the fact that they've paid for it once, number one, and, number two, we're in a tight budget year. But I think Sen. Nelson is on the right track." On MSNBC's Hardball (3/6, Matthews), Crist said, "In an ideal world, what we'd like to see is the Democrats seat the delegates who have already really been selected as a result of the fact that we had a record turnout vote on January 29 here. ... They wanted to have their voice heard. They wanted to make sure, half of the voters of the Sunshine State, that their votes were not disenfranchised."

LATimes Supports "Do-Overs" For Florida, Michigan. The Los Angeles Times (3/7, 881K) editorializes, "It's time to declare an electoral Groundhog Day for Florida and Michigan and allow voters there another chance to help choose the Democratic presidential nominee. Ordinarily, this page objects to mulligans, do-overs and last-minute changes that erode respect for the rules of fair play. But there is a way to put the increasingly wacky nominating contest back on track, giving voters a say without rewarding the errant state politicians who broke the rules in the first place. ... It's the responsibility of the state officials who broke the rules to find the money to fix this problem -- and voters must demand they do it."

Florida Democrats Consider Primary By Mail. McClatchy (3/7, Clark) reports, "With pressure to resolve the Florida Democratic primary's renegade status intensifying, the state party is looking at the possibility of giving voters a chance to cast a second ballot in the presidential primary -- by mail. The party has all but ruled out as too costly holding an election in which voters would go to the polls, but is looking at a mail-in contest." Florida Democratic Sen. and Hillary Clinton backer Bill Nelson "called on the" DNC "Thursday to foot the bill for a revote. But" DNC "Chairman Howard Dean earlier in the day refused. ... Dean said the party has two options: Schedule a re-vote or appeal to a party committee convening this summer to recognize the Jan. 29 vote. But he appeared to warn the states against waiting until just before the August convention in Denver."

ANALYSIS: CLINTON CAN'T OVERTAKE OBAMA'S DELEGATE LEAD WITHOUT SUPERDELEGATES. The AP (3/7, Ohlemacher) reports, "Hillary Rodham Clinton won't catch Barack Obama in the race for Democratic delegates chosen in primaries and caucuses, even if she wins every remaining contest. But Obama cannot win the nomination with just his pledged primary and caucus delegates either, according to an analysis by The Associated Press. That sets the stage for a pitched battle for support among 'superdelegates' ... In the overall race for the nomination, Obama has 1,569 delegates, to 1,462 for Clinton, according to the latest AP tally. The lobbying of superdelegates has been fierce, with at least six Clinton superdelegates switching to Obama. So far, none of Obama's superdelegates has strayed, at least not publicly."

The Wall Street Journal (3/7, A4, Calmes, 2.06M) reports, "Sen. Barack Obama is all but certain to keep his lead in delegates through the last contest in June. He still won't have enough to be nominee. But he'll need a lot fewer superdelegates to put him over the top than Sen. Hillary Clinton. ... Fewer than 1,000 delegates remain; 611 in the final dozen contests ... Look for the candidates to split the 611 delegates ... Sen. Obama would need 147 more; Sen. Clinton 261. That makes the uncommitted 346 superdelegates the deciders (although the previously committed others can change their minds). Sen. Obama would need to snare four out of 10 of the uncommitted. Sen. Clinton would need 75% of them. The one calculation that could help give her the lead: adding the big Florida and Michigan delegations."

Clinton Wins Freeze Superdelegates' Effort To Get Her To Quit. Bloomberg News (3/6, Jensen, Goldman) says Clinton's primary victories this week "helped freeze a movement of top Democrats set to call on her to concede to rival Barack Obama. A group of uncommitted 'superdelegates' were ready to make a show of support for Obama by trying to pressure Clinton to give up," according to ex-Rep. Tim Roemer, who is "rounding up backers for Obama. Now, after her wins in Texas, Ohio and Rhode Island, many will still back Obama without calling on Clinton to quit, he said."

The New York Times (3/6, Nagourney, Hulse, 1.18M) says Clinton's victories "barely dented" Obama's lead in delegates, "but they seemed to slow the Democratic Party establishment's move in his direction while giving her campaign time to try to turn the race in her favor." A second New York Times (3/6, Healy, 1.18M) piece considers whether Clinton can "persevere to ultimately win the nomination," concluding that while "she faces a steep uphill climb in trying to overtake" Obama, "it is doable." Clinton advisers "are urging the remaining 448 uncommitted superdelegates to sit tight and let the primary season play out before choosing a candidate."

TEXAS DEMOCRATIC CAUCUS STILL UNRESOLVED. The AP (3/7, Shannon) reports, "Fewer than half of Texas' voting sites had reported the results by Thursday from Democratic caucuses Tuesday night that were so chaotic and overcrowded by record turnout that police were called to some polling places. So there's no winner yet for the caucuses ... As of Thursday afternoon, Sen. Barack Obama was ahead with 56 percent to Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton's 44 percent based on reports to state party headquarters by 41 percent of the precinct caucuses." Caucus officials "are required only to mail the results of their caucuses to their county party chairmen 72 hours after the primary election day." Another reason for slow reporting is unexpected turnout of "4.2 million, a third of the state's registered voters."

BREAKING RECORD, OBAMA RAISED $55 MILLION IN FEBRUARY. ABC World News (3/6, story 5, 2:30, Gibson, 8.78M) reported, "Now, we turn to presidential politics. The Clinton campaign has announced it has raised $4 million just since Tuesday. The Obama campaign countered by saying it raised a record $55 million in the month of February."

NBC Nightly News (3/6, story 5, 2:15, Mitchell, 9.87M) reported of the Obama campaign, "breaking all fund-raising records for February by collecting $55 million, $20 million more than Clinton. Chuck Todd, NBC News political director: "Fifty-five million in a month is unbelievable."

Clinton Has Raised $4 Million Since Tuesday. The AP (3/7, Kuhnhehn) reports, "All told, Obama has raised $193 million during his yearlong bid for the White House. The campaign's announcement Thursday came two days after Obama lost three of four primaries to Clinton. ... Clinton's camp announced Thursday that she raised $4 million online since Tuesday's presidential primary successes in Ohio, Texas and Rhode Island. The Clinton campaign said it had raised the money from the time polls closed Tuesday through noon Thursday. It reported 30,000 new donors. The influx of money made their online total raised for this month $6 million, the campaign announced."

CLINTON AIDE LIKENS OBAMA TO KEN STARR. The AP (3/7, Pickler) reports Sen. Hillary Clinton's "campaign compared rival Sen. Barack Obama on Thursday to independent prosecutor Kenneth Starr, the Clintons' chief nemesis of the 1990s. Clinton herself declined to comment on the comparison, made by her chief spokesman [Howard Wolfson] in a conference call with reporters and also in a memo distributed by the campaign." Wolfson said, "I for one do not believe that imitating Ken Starr is the way to win a Democratic primary election for president," in discussing Obama's announcement "that he plans to be more critical of Clinton's record. ... Obama spokesman Bill Burton said the comparison to Starr is 'absurd' when Clinton has been calling for more scrutiny of Obama's record." Asked about the Wolfson remarks, Clinton said, "I'm not going to respond to that."

NBC Nightly News (3/6, story 5, 2:15, Mitchell, 9.87M) reported, "After Obama's losses this week, he has decided to get more aggressive. Prompting a top Clinton aide to say he was acting like Whitewater prosecutor Ken Starr, fighting words to most Democrats." The Chicago Tribune (3/7, Pearson, McCormick, 607K) called Wolfson's statement a furthering of the Clinton campaign's "efforts to portray her as a political victim."

Clinton Blasts Obama On Foreign Policy. ABC World News (3/6, story 5, 2:30, Gibson, 8.78M) reported, "Senator Clinton took an opportunity to again argue that Senator Obama lacked the experience to be commander in chief." ABC (Tapper) added, "Some Democratic officials fear that Clinton now seems willing to do whatever it takes to defeat Obama, regardless of the risk that she may be irreparably harming him if he is the eventual Democratic nominee." Matthew Dowd, ABC News political contributor: "Everything that Hillary Clinton has been saying over the course of the last couple weeks are all great sound bites and great cuts for John McCain to use in the fall."

CLINTON CAMP DENIES TELLING CANADA NOT TO WORRY ABOUT NAFTA STANCE. The Financial Times (3/7, Simon, Dombey) reports that the "dispute over Canada's involvement in the US presidential race took a new turn" as the Canadian government and Sen. Hillary Clinton's campaign "both fended off allegations that Mrs Clinton's staff had told Ottawa not to worry about her stance" on NAFTA. CTV television reporters "said a senior Canadian official had told them in a casual conversation last week that Mrs Clinton's campaign had assured the Canadians that her promise to renegotiate Nafta should be taken 'with a grain of salt.'" The Clinton campaign "fiercely denied the suggestion."

The Financial Times (3/7, Simon) also reports that Ian Brodie, chief of staff to Canadian Prime Minister Stephen Harper, "gave journalists the tip-off that led to the damaging story about Barack Obama's stance" on NAFTA, according to CTV staff. But CTV reporters say Brodie "told them that it was Hillary Clinton's campaign -- not Mr Obama's -- which had assured the Canadians that trade threats should not be taken too seriously. The Obama connection surfaced after checking the story with other sources."

The Financial Times (3/7, Dombey, Simon) further reports, "Foreign governments have begun to rethink their own part in the US campaign" in the wake of "the leak of a Canadian government document last week detailing the views of Mr Obama's economic adviser on international trade."

The AP (3/7, Gillies) reports, "Prime Minister Stephen Harper's chief of staff said someone in Hillary Rodham Clinton's campaign gave Canada back-channel assurances that her harsh words about the North American Free Trade Agreement were for political show ... The report comes just days after a Canadian government memo stated Barack Obama's senior economic adviser told Canadian officials that the Illinois senator's own comments about NAFTA were for 'political positioning.'" The Canadian Press "said a CTV reporter asked [Harper chief of staff Ian] Brodie about remarks by Clinton and Obama that they would seek to renegotiate NAFTA. 'He said someone from Clinton's campaign is telling the embassy to take it with a grain of salt. ... That someone called us and told us not to worry,' the journalist quoted Brodie as saying ... Clinton spokesman Phil Singer said the campaign 'flatly denied' the suggestion ... Some Democrats, as well as Canadian opposition parties, have accused Harper's Conservative government of meddling in the U.S. primary elections ... In Ottawa, Canadian opposition parties demanded Brodie be fired."

WYOMING INFLUENTIAL IN DEMOCRATIC POLITICS AT LAST. The AP (3/7, Gruver) reports, "Not since 1960 have Wyoming Democrats felt so relevant. That year, at the Democratic National Convention, the state's delegation cast 15 votes that pushed Sen. John F. Kennedy over the top ... Wyoming Democrats are feeling relevant again as Sens. Hillary Rodham Clinton and Barack Obama focus on the 12 delegates at stake in Saturday's caucus. ... It remains unclear which Democrat might have an edge; no public polling has been done in the state. However, at least one prominent Wyoming Democrat [state party chair John Millin] has questioned whether Clinton's unpopularity would hurt other Democratic candidates in the West." Gov. Dave Frueudenthal, the state's top Democrat, "has said he doesn't like any of the candidates, Republican or Democratic, because they haven't spoken enough about Western issues. He hasn't endorsed anyone and will not say who, as a superdelegate, he will vote for at the national convention."

The New York Times (3/7, Johnson, 1.18M) reports similarly from Wyoming, "Being a Democrat in this state means that one's status in political life is rarely in question and rarely that good. ... This time, Democrats here say, it feels different. In contrast to all the dismally attended, demoralized Democratic presidential caucuses of past years, the outnumbered Democrats of Wyoming might actually have something to roar about. ... Around the state, caucus locations are being moved from living rooms to meeting halls. Here in Laramie County, the most populous, Democrats reserved the Cheyenne Civic Center, which will seat up to 1,500 people for an event that in the past has drawn maybe 250."

CHELSEA CLINTON ADDRESSES UNIVERSITY OF PENNSYLVANIA CROWD. The New York Times (3/7, Seelye, 1.18M) reports Sen. Hillary Clinton "wasted no time planting her flag in the next big battleground state, sending" Chelsea Clinton to the University of Pennsylvania to speak to students. Chelsea told the students, "I hope you don't get tired of seeing me or seeing my family, because I have a feeling we'll be here a lot over the next number of weeks." MSNBC (3/6, Murray) reported on its website that the "informal Q&A session seemed to be geared towards connecting her mother with the youth vote and educating them on the candidate's issues and stances. Chelsea assured the audience that she believed in her mother 'not only as her daughter, but as a young woman and as a voter.'"

Clinton, Obama Put Iowa-Caliber Effort Into Pennsylvania. The Washington Post (3/7, A8, Kornblut, Williams, 723K) says Clinton and Obama "are mounting campaign efforts in Pennsylvania on a scale not seen since the Iowa caucuses, even as the Obama campaign attempted to cast the April 22 contest as just another in a string of more than a dozen to go." Pennsylvania Democratic Party Chairman T.J. Rooney said, "It's Iowa on steroids." But "senior Obama advisers sought to play down the importance of Pennsylvania, which is full of the same kind of white, working-class voters who supported Clinton in Ohio and other states that she won." The Pittsburgh Post-Gazette (3/7, Rujumba, 229K) reports both campaigns "are scrambling to get supporters who are independents and Republicans to register as Democrats so they can vote in the April 22 primary."

The Los Angeles Times (3/7, Frederick, 881K) reports on the national attention that is expected to be applied to Pennsylvania in the coming weeks, noting that since it "bided its time and didn't muscle its way into the first frenetic weeks of the presidential primary process, it is about to be rewarded (or, some voters might think, cursed) with virtually unalloyed attention over the next 6 1/2 weeks from Democrats Hillary Rodham Clinton and Barack Obama." The Times sees Pennsylvania as "hospitable turf for Clinton. The state, which holds its primary April 22, should be hospitable turf for Clinton. A Rasmussen Reports poll conducted Wednesday -- fresh off her wins in Ohio and Texas -- gave her a 52%-37% lead."

ARCHIVISTS AT CLINTON LIBRARY BLOCK RELEASE OF PARDON DOCUMENTS. USA Today (3/7, Eisler, 2.28M) reports, "Federal archivists at the Clinton Presidential Library are blocking the release of hundreds of pages of White House papers on pardons" approved by Bill Clinton, "including clemency for fugitive commodities trader Marc Rich." Their decision, "based on guidance provided by Bill Clinton that restricts the disclosure of advice he received from aides, prevents public scrutiny of documents that would shed light on how he decided which pardons to approve from among hundreds of requests."

BILL CLINTON'S ACCOONA "WINDFALL" NOTED. The Washington Times (3/7, McElhatton, 87K) reports, "The spring before his wife began her White House campaign, former President Bill Clinton earned $700,000 for his foundation by selling stock that he had been given from an Internet search company that was co-founded by a convicted felon and backed by the Chinese government, public records show. Mr. Clinton had gotten the nonpublicly traded stock from Accoona Corp. back in 2004 as a gift for giving a speech at a company event. He landed the windfall by selling the 200,000 shares to an undisclosed buyer in May 2006, commanding $3.50 a share at a time when the company was reporting millions of dollars of losses, according to interviews."

OBAMA LECTURES PRESS ON PLANE FOR "GOING ALL SQUISHY" ON CLINTON. The Los Angeles Times (3/7, LaGanga, 881K) reports that Sen. Barack Obama lectured "on the finer points of media and politics in front of an audience that's about as captive as it can be. Standing in the aisle of his campaign plane this week

-- cabin doors bolted, engines running -- Obama scolded reporters for going all squishy on rival Hillary Rodham Clinton. 'There's no doubt Sen. Clinton went very negative over the last week,' said Obama, whose winning streak had just broken with a loud snap. 'The kitchen-sink strategy I'm sure had some impact, particularly in a context where many of you in the press corps had been persuaded that you had been too hard on her and too soft on me,' he said."

REZKO ATTORNEY CITES OBAMA IN OPENING STATEMENT. Coverage of the opening of the Tony Rezko trial depicted Sen. Barack Obama as a "footnote" who barely figured in the first day's proceedings. The Politico (3/7, Vogel) reports, "Barack Obama is only a bit player in the federal trial of his former fundraiser and friend Antoin 'Tony' Rezko, but it didn't take long for the name of the Illinois senator and Democratic presidential candidate to be raised in court. In his opening statement Thursday, Rezko's lead defense attorney, Joseph Duffy...said that" his client's political involvement "stemmed from Rezko's affection for the political process and desire to help candidates he believed had the public's best interest at heart. Duffy said Rezko raised money for the campaigns of Republicans and Democrats alike and expected nothing in return. ... Rezko 'met Barack Obama when he was in Harvard Law School and tried to hire him' to be the lawyer for Rezko's development company, the defense attorney said." The prosecution "didn't name Obama and barely mentioned Rezko's political fundraising. It focused instead on kickbacks it alleges Rezko arranged and received for steering state business from two state boards to which he had ties."

The AP (3/6) reports federal prosecutors "focused a spotlight on the underside of Illinois politics Thursday, telling jurors" that Rezko, "a prolific fundraiser who lavished donations on Sen. Barack Obama and others, peddled his clout to corrupt state government." But it was Gov. Rod Blagojevich, not Obama, who was mentioned "less than five minutes into" Assistant US Attorney Carrie Hamilton's opening statement, "which highlighted hefty financial contributions to the Democratic governor's campaign and Rezko's apparent influence on state board appointments."

Greetings Professor Podesta --

I'm Domenic, 29, and we met awhile back at the Italian Embassy event for President, Secretary, and Chelsea Clinton and the Clinton Foundation (September 2013).

Currently, I work for Homeland Security on an array of policy issues (fiscal, appropriations, immigration, humanitarian, and the like) and I also adjunct an undergraduate public policy course with South Carolina's Washington Semester Program.

I write to request an opportunity to 1. speak with you to garner your professional insights / expertise regarding my own political, policy, teaching, and public service career goals; and, 2. invite you to speak with my students next semester any Monday evening that might be amenable to your schedule.

Thank you very much in advance for your time.

Respectfully yours,

Domenic

Bloomberg: “Hillary Clinton Leads \$600 Million Effort for Girls in Education”

By Janet Lorin

September 24, 2014

Hillary and Chelsea Clinton, along with the Brookings Institution, are spearheading an almost $600 million effort to help disadvantaged girls, mostly in Sub-Saharan Africa and Southwest Asia, attend secondary school.

Hillary Clinton announced the effort today at the annual meeting of the Clinton Global Initiative, which with the Center for Universal Education at Brookings helped draw participation. More than 30 groups have committed to the project.

The money is expected to aid about 14 million girls in the next five years. It will establish programs to help them enter secondary schools in a safe environment, improve the quality of learning, complete secondary education and support them through universities and into the workforce. Each group – including nonprofit organizations like UNICEF, the country of Nepal and corporations such as Pearson Plc (PSON) and MasterCard Inc. – will decide how its own money is spent to achieve the effort’s goals.

“We’ve made progress at the primary level,” said Rachel Vogelstein, director of women and girls programs at the Clinton Foundation. “This initiative addresses the unfinished business in girls’ education, which is progress at the secondary level.”

The idea for the project came from Julia Gillard, the former Australian prime minister, in her role as a fellow with Brookings, said Jennifer Klein, senior adviser for the Foundation’s women and girls programs. Gillard, the first woman to lead Australia, was defeated in a leadership vote last year.

Girls’ Education

Gillard, who is also board chair of Washington-based nonprofit group Global Partnership for Education, approached former U.S. Secretary of State Clinton more than a year ago with the idea to work on “second-generation” girls’ education issues, Klein said.

The result is called Collective Harnessing Ambition & Resources for Girls Education, or CHARGE. For groups to participate, they must have already raised 75 percent of the money they plan to commit, Klein said.

“Each partner will determine the needs of the country where they are working,” Klein said.

For example, a group called BRAC, founded in 1972 as Bangladesh Rural Advancement Committee, will work in eight countries to teach life skills, financial literacy and microfinance, among other initiatives. The government of Nepal will provide bicycles for girls to get to school.

The Clinton Global Initiative, which began Sunday night and concludes today, is an annual gathering of political and business leaders, philanthropists and celebrity activists.

Some of the speakers included World Bank Group President Jim Yong Kim; actor Leonardo DiCaprio; President Barack Obama; and Mary Barra, chief executive officer of General Motors Co.

[Subtitle:] Clinton and former Australian Prime Minister Julia Gillard announced $600 million in private and public funding for global education

On Wednesday morning, Hillary Clinton and Former Australian Prime Minister Julia Gillard announced a new Clinton Global Initiative commitment with the Center on Universal Education at the Brookings Institute for girls' education called CHARGE (The Collaborative for Harnessing Ambition and Resources for Girls Education). The initiative will include 30 other partners, including governments like the United States and organizations from the private sector, committing $600 million to reach 14 million girls around the world in the next five years.

“It's time to both celebrate the progress we've made and redouble our efforts,” said Clinton at the announcement.

Gillard, a fellow at the Brookings Institute, approached Secretary Clinton and Chelsea Clinton a year ago to work together on the initiative. “I think across the world, as we talk about women in developing countries, there's been increasing recognition that empowering women and girls is a key change agent for development. There have been some truly shocking incidents that have caused us to have tears in our eyes and sharply intake our breath—what happened to Malala, what has happened with the Nigerian schoolgirls—that powerfully remind us that in some part of the world, getting an education is still a very dangerous thing for a girl,” Gillard told TIME. “It's being targeted because it's powerful. Education is powerful, which is why some people want to stop it and why we should feel so passionate about assuring that it occurs.”

Up until now, world leaders have focused on enrolling girls in primary school at the same rate as boys. And though the rate of female enrollment in primary school has risen from less than half to nearly 80% in the last 25 years, issues of quality and safety still persist. The Girls CHARGE initiative aims to address what they are calling a “second generation” of girls' issues especially in Sub-Saharan Africa and South West Asia. And while incidents like the kidnapping in Nigeria of more than 200 school girls by the radical group Boko Haram are extreme, they are emblematic of the harsh realities of educating girls in some parts of the world.

CHARGE has five main goals:

1. Keep girls in school
2. Ensure school safety and security

3. Improve quality of learning for girls
4. Support transitions from and out of school
5. Support girls' education leaders/workers in developing countries to fulfill these goals

Partners of CHARGE are taking different steps in specific regions to reach these goals. The government of Nepal is committing $29 million to the cause and providing bicycles to girls to ensure girls can get to and from school. The BRAC organization is establishing 8,000 adolescent girl clubs in Bangladesh by 2019 to provide safe spaces for girls, among other efforts.

The Clinton Global Initiative and Brookings will evaluate the progress of the organizations towards their goals over the course of the next five years. Any government that wants to join the effort can.

Developing nations must work towards gender equality in education to improve their economy: Educated women add to family income by working, and their children are more likely to become educated themselves. But those girls most desperately in need live in countries where the governments don't want to cooperate with initiatives like this one. "That's obviously a huge challenge," Rachel Vogelstein of the Clinton Foundation's No Ceilings Initiative told TIME. "We're hoping to work with our partners and civil society organizations to cultivate leaders on a grassroots level in those locations."

But even as Clinton and Gillard look to empower women across the globe, they recognize that there are still equality gaps in the Western World as well. Both Gillard and Clinton have faced misogyny throughout their political careers. Gillard points out that women in countries like the United States and Australia cannot settle and must still fight for progress:

"My own perspective is that in many places around the world—Australia, here in the United States—after the big push of the second wave of feminism in our own nations, there was the assumption made that naturally gender change was happening and everything would equalize. I think in recent years there's been a realization that no, there are still problems in our own nations, including domestic violence, that require a dedicated focus and approach. The dialogue both in Australia and the United States must still include questions of political leadership, corporate leadership, civil society leadership where doors still need to be opened for women."

Bloomberg: "Hillary Clinton Hints at Platform to Support Working Moms"

By Jonathan Allen

September 24, 2014, 11:06 a.m. EDT

Hillary Clinton said today that women shouldn't have to choose between motherhood and advancing their careers, a theme that may resurface as part of a platform if she runs for president in 2016.

"The absence of paid leave is a strong signal to women, and particularly mothers, that society and our economy don't value being a mother," the former U.S. secretary of state said. "The absence of quality, affordable childcare -- and affordable and quality have to go together -- is a very big factor in limiting and sometimes ending women's participation in the workforce."

Clinton, who spoke during a panel discussion with philanthropist Melinda Gates at the Clinton Global Initiative's annual conference in New York, has increasingly embraced advocacy for women and girls as a political plus while she considers a second presidential bid. Many of her closest friends and advisers lamented her decision to play down her gender during her losing 2008 presidential campaign.

Now, Clinton is calling attention to obstacles to women becoming and remaining full participants in the economy as well as possible remedies.

"If we did more on child care and we did more on paid family leave, particularly for new mothers, we would be sending the right signals," she said. Clinton added that society must find a way to ensure that women are "not being penalized" for becoming mothers.

"We still have a lot of cultural, customary, even attitudinal, psychological barriers" to equality, she said.

Hillary Rodham Clinton announced a $600 million effort Wednesday to enroll girls in secondary schools around the globe, aiming to address security and access problems in the developing world.

The former secretary of state unveiled the plan at the Clinton Global Initiative to help 14 million girls typically between the ages of 11 and 16 to attend school. The initiative, carried out via her family's foundation, aims to improve the quality, safety and security at schools around the world.

"We know when girls have equal access to quality education in both primary and secondary schools, cycles of poverty are broken, economies grow, glass ceilings crack and potential is unleashed," Clinton said.

Clinton has promoted the advancement of women and girls around the world through an initiative at the foundation called "No Ceilings." The former first lady and New York senator is expected to announce by early next year whether she will seek the Democratic presidential nomination in 2016.

Philanthropic groups and non-governmental organizations have sought to address the gap in secondary education and security concerns for young girls in the aftermath of the kidnapping of dozens of young women by Boko Haram in Nigeria. The issue received global attention following the 2012 attack on teenage activist Malala Yousafzai, who received world acclaim after she was shot in the head by the Taliban for advocating gender equality and education for women.

Clinton's foundation noted that in sub-Saharan Africa, 1.5 million fewer girls than boys attend secondary schools. The initiative, which will be led by former Australian Prime Minister Julia Gillard, includes more than 30 partners, including the United States, Nepal, the United Kingdom and Discovery Communications.

New York Daily News: "Hillary Clinton calls for paid family leave for working mothers"

By Annie Karni

September 24, 2014, 1:02 p.m. EDT

Speaking on one of her core issues of women's equality, Hillary Clinton said Wednesday the U.S. must work to provide paid family leave for new mothers to ensure women's equality in the workforce.

"The absence of quality affordable childcare is a very big factor in limiting and sometimes ending women's participation in the workforce," Clinton said at a panel discussion with philanthropist Melinda Gates, moderated by New York Times Upshot editor David Leonhardt, at the annual Clinton Global Initiative conference. "The absence of paid leave is a strong signal to women and particularly mothers that the society and our economy don't value being a mother."

The Family and Medical Leave Act was signed into law by former President Bill Clinton more than 20 years ago and offers up to 12 weeks of unpaid leave. But the U.S. lags behind other high-income countries in not offering paid leave.

"If we did more for childcare and we did more on paid family leave, particularly for new mothers, we would be sending the right signals," Clinton said.

But she said life is better than it was for American women 20 years ago.

"When I was a young woman, there were colleges I couldn't go to, scholarships I couldn't apply for, jobs that had basically invisible, but very clear signs saying 'no woman need apply,'" Clinton said.

That has improved over the past two decades, but women still lag in their earning potential compared to men, she said. "We've gone from 77 cents to 78 cents compared to a dollar [earned by men]," she said. "That's hardly groundbreaking progress."

New York Times: First Draft: "At Clintons' Event, a Really Close Watch on Reporters"

By Amy Chozick

September 24, 2014, 12:33 p.m. EDT

Charitable commitments have been made. Important topics like Ebola and elephant poaching have been discussed. World leaders from President Obama to Prime Minister Shinzo Abe of Japan have convened.

But, for me, perhaps the person who stands out is the friendly 20-something press aide who the Clinton Global Initiative tasked with escorting me to the restroom. She waited outside the stall in the ladies' room at the Sheraton Hotel, where the conference is held each year.

Security, foundation aides told me, dictates that the hordes of journalists, many of them from overseas news outlets, be cloistered in a basement at the Sheraton. An elaborate maze of security barricades separates where reporters enter and roam (though not freely) from the lobby of the hotel, where actual guests enter.

An escort is required wherever we go, lest one of us with our yellow press badges wind up somewhere where attendants with an esteemed blue badge are milling around. When asked about the practice, Craig Minassian, a spokesman for the initiative, directed me to a press release about American Standard's Flush for Good campaign to improve sanitation for three million people in the developing world. "Since you are so interested in bathrooms and C.G.I.," Mr. Minassian said.

On Wednesday morning, ahead of a panel discussion at which Hillary Rodham Clinton introduced the event's biggest commitment, to get Nigerian girls access to secondary education (called Charge, short for the Collaborative for Harnessing Ambition and Resources for Girls' Education), several dozen reporters lined up to pass through metal detectors when several people jumped the queue. “They’re with Katie Couric!” a press aide explained when a journalist (O.K., me) complained. (Ms. Couric, they later explained, would be moderating a panel later that morning with Chelsea Clinton.)

It wasn’t always like this. While there were always metal detectors and heightened security at the conference, which typically takes place during the United Nations General Assembly and includes speeches by Mr. Obama, Bill Clinton and others, reporters could roam relatively freely until last year, when interest in and scrutiny of the Bill, Hillary & Chelsea Clinton Foundation spiked amid speculation that Mrs. Clinton would run for president in 2016.

Washington Post blog: She The People: “Cleaner, more efficient cookstoves should be on front burner of women’s needs in developing countries”

By Diana Reese

September 24, 2014, 8:37 a.m. EDT

American moms — and yes, I’m sometimes guilty — complain that cooking dinner can be a burden, but we’ve got it good as we debate the merits of a smooth surface cooktop versus traditional burners or electric versus gas ranges.

“Little do we realize as painful as cooking seems to us, it is nowhere near as painful and harmful as it is for our sisters in the developing world,” said Radha Muthiah, executive director of the Global Alliance for Clean Cookstoves, launched by then-Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton in 2010.

For 3 billion of the world’s people, cooking can be downright dangerous, according to the World Health Organization: Four million premature deaths a year, primarily of women and children, are blamed on exposure to toxic smoke from cooking fires and rudimentary stoves that burn wood, coal and “biomass” — stuff like animal dung and crop waste.

Various types of cancer, low birth weights for babies and even cardiovascular disease have all been linked to the indoor pollution caused by cooking over open fires or leaky stoves. Then there’s the increased risk of burns; 307,000 of the 330,000 people who die from burn injuries each year are from developing countries, according to ReSurge International, which provides reconstructive surgery for the poor around the globe.

These primitive methods of cooking also impact the environment by creating 25 percent of the world’s black carbon emissions (commonly called “soot”) and destroying forests.

Muthiah described to me the typical day of a woman in rural Kenya or India: The woman will rise as early as 4 a.m. so she can collect fuel — be it wood or animal or crop waste — “anything they can burn.” Because of deforestation, women sometimes have to walk for several hours to pick up enough wood, putting themselves at risk for animal attacks and other violence.

A daughter might come along to help, missing out on school. They may carry up to 60 kilograms (132 pounds) of fuel on their heads or in baskets.

Women often struggle with this chore three or four times a week, Muthiah said, because cooking over an open fire or with rudimentary stoves is such an inefficient use of fuel.

“It’s a real timesink for women,” she said, taking up one-third to one-half of a woman’s 24-hour day.

For the urban women in developing nations, the issue is economic. They can afford to buy only small quantities of fuel at a time, making it more expensive, Muthiah said, as they spend up to 40 percent of their daily household income on fuel.

More efficient stoves requiring less fuel would save time and money for rural and urban women. That savings of time gives them the opportunity to pursue other activities, whether it's walking with their children to school or earning a livelihood — empowering women to take charge of their lives.

This is a big week for the alliance, what with the Clinton Global Initiative 10th Annual Meeting and the United Nations Climate Summit 2014 in New York. In November, the alliance holds the first Cookstoves Future Summit: Fueling Markets, Catalyzing Action, Changing Lives in New York. The invitation-only summit will be co-chaired by Clinton, who's the honorary chair of the Alliance Leadership Council.

The strategy of the Global Alliance for Clean Cookstoves differs from previous efforts to simply donate cookstoves to families around the world without a good idea of their needs and sometimes without providing education, training or service.

Instead, the alliance focuses on creating a global market for clean cookstoves and clean fuels. "The consumer needs to be involved," Muthiah pointed out. "We need to view the user as a consumer and understand what attributes [of stoves and fuels] are valuable," rather than seeing the end user as "a passive beneficiary."

So the alliance has partnered with public, private and nonprofit interests to work on every facet of creating that market, including the design, manufacturing, assembly, distribution, sales and even after-sales service. In many cases, that manufacturing and assembly are done locally, Muthiah said.

It's not "a one-size-fits-all solution." Latin American women often stand while cooking and want a large top burner to cook multiple tortillas and a pot of beans, while African women sit down and need a simmer button for long-term cooking, Muthiah said, requiring different types of stoves.

In the southern state of Kerala in India, 97 percent of homes have some access to electricity, so they can move directly to stoves using electricity, while rural villages elsewhere in India do not and need stoves powered by other sources of cleaner fuel such as liquified petroleum gas, ethanol, solar and biogas.

The alliance has also worked with the International Organization for Standards to develop a rating system for cookstoves, measuring four performance indicators: fuel use, total emissions, indoor emissions and safety.

Most families are not aware of the hazards or health implications from their cooking methods, Muthiah said. They don't realize the possible link between how they cook food and their baby's low birth weight or their child's pneumonia.

"Awareness is so important," Muthiah said. "It's more than half the battle."

But it's also a process of changing behavior. "We have to show them they can [still] cook the same meals as their mothers and grandmothers cooked" on new stoves, she said.

But once women see the statistics and the stories, "they get it," Muthiah said. "Women are practical all over the world." They want to figure out how to get a decent cookstove. Some go for the cheaper model they can buy outright, while others look at financing plans.

The cost for these safer and more efficient stoves can range from $15 to $150, depending on factors such as fuel type and durability. Some women become marketing and sales agents, turning the cookstove into an income generator.

The goal for the alliance is to switch 100 million households to cleaner stoves by the year 2020. It's a triple win, Muthiah points out, for health, for the environment and for women's empowerment.

"We're trying to put this issue on the front burner," she told me. "In this day and age, women should not be cooking this way."

Associated Press: "NYC Mayor Steps Onto Bigger Political States"

By Jonathan Lemire

September 24, 2014, 1:54 a.m. EDT

A speech at the United Nations. A spot next to Al Gore leading a massive climate change march. A prime speaking slot at a political conference in England.

Those big stages - all happening within a few days of each other - have become more common for New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio. His profile is on the rise both nationally and internationally and he is increasingly viewed in political circles as a rising star, particularly in the most liberal wing of the Democratic party.

De Blasio's higher profile - partly a concerted effort by his team and partly a byproduct of leading the nation's largest city - has provided him everything from a platform from which to espouse his liberal politics views to potentially setting him up as a valuable surrogate in the 2016 presidential election.

"It enhances his power locally, because he becomes more formidable for having achieved this global respect," said Kenneth Sherrill, retired political science professor at Hunter College. "And he's serious about being a spokesman for a national urban agenda."

De Blasio's rise has been sudden. A mere 18 months ago, he was a little-known second-tier mayoral candidate. But his campaign soared just as those of other contenders imploded, and after spending his first few months in office solely focused on his legislative agenda, the new mayor began to step beyond the five boroughs.

Looking to spread his view of an activist urban government, he attended meetings with U.S. mayors in Dallas and Chicago and later hosted the U.S. Conference of Mayors in New York. He journeyed to Washington to lobby for big cities and attended a White House state dinner. He's hosted various political dignitaries at City Hall and, even on a family vacation to Italy, met with the mayor of Rome.

A spokesman for de Blasio said the mayor's focus is his city and dismissed any suggestion that voters could perceive he was more interested in global issues.

"Income inequality doesn't stop at a city limit, a state line or a national border," said Phil Walzak, "and by promoting local strategies and building a national urban agenda together, the mayor believes we can create real change for people in New York City, and beyond."

This week is de Blasio's biggest step yet onto the global political stage. He marched with Gore and hundreds of thousands of demonstrators on Sunday to lobby the United Nations on climate change and then on Tuesday he addressed the UN's General Assembly on the same topic. On Wednesday, he will speak about progressive values at the Labour Party's annual conference in Manchester, England.

His growing stature has been noted in national political circles.

De Blasio now is mentioned as a leader of the progressive wing of the Democratic Party as 2016 approaches. Hillary Rodham Clinton, the strong favorite for her party's presidential nomination if she decides to run, is closely linked to him. He managed her 2000 Senate campaign.

Clinton was beaten on the left by Barack Obama during the 2008 presidential primaries and some fear she may be vulnerable there again; a powerful de Blasio could provide some protection.

"I think he could be enormously helpful to the Clintons, because a thumbs-up from him will go a long way in progressive circles," said Jeanne Zaino, political science professor at Iona College.

Clinton and her husband have stayed close to de Blasio, appearing at his Inauguration and at several events since. Donna Brazile, an adviser to the Clintons, said de Blasio has quickly become a leading voice in the party on addressing income inequality and promoting early childhood education.

"His agenda is designed to lift up people who need better jobs, more opportunity and better schools," Brazile said.

De Blasio is far from the first New York mayor to become a star beyond his city's borders. Michael Bloomberg used the stature of the office - and his personal fortune - to become a leading voice on climate change, while Rudy Giuliani came to be viewed as a national authority on crime.

But de Blasio may not be a household name just yet. Last weekend, he and an aide took a spur of the moment road to trip to Pittsburgh and sat in the stands at a Pirates game.

The mayor largely went unnoticed.

The Hill blog: Ballot Box: "RNC hits Hillary Clinton for ties to Goldman Sachs"

By Peter Sullivan

September 24, 2014, 11:39 a.m. EDT

The Republican National Committee released a video on Wednesday with the point of showing how well the CEO of Goldman Sachs and Hillary Clinton know each other, echoing a criticism usually voiced on the left.

The GOP "rapid response" video, posted on YouTube, is a clip of Clinton inviting Goldman Sachs CEO Lloyd Blankfein on stage at the Clinton Global Initiative's annual meeting in New York on Wednesday.

The caption of the video is "Goldman Sachs CEO jokes about how well he knows Hillary Clinton."

After Clinton introduces Blankfein, along with two other people, he takes the stage, greets Clinton, and says, "So this isn't the first time we've all met."

Blankfein was there to discuss Goldman Sachs' 10,000 Women initiative, which supports women in business around the world.

It is not surprising that the RNC is releasing videos critical of Clinton, given that she is the frontrunner for the Democratic nomination for president, but this video makes a point usually heard from liberals.

There has long been grumbling on the left that Clinton is too close to Wall Street, leading to speculation that she could face a liberal primary challenger such as Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.).

Clinton in particular came under fire for speaking at Goldman Sachs in October.

In 2012, Democrats were the ones trying portray the Republican presidential nominee, Mitt Romney, as out of touch because of his past at the private equity firm Bain Capital.

Earlier in the program on Wednesday, Clinton announced an initiative through the Clinton Foundation that will spend $600 million on helping girls attend secondary school around the world.

Washington Free Beacon: "Wall Street Gets to Bill and Hillary"

By Brent Scher

September 24, 2014, 11:15 a.m. EDT

[Subtitle:] After summer in Hamptons, Clintons adopt Wall Street tune on inversions

Bill and Hillary Clinton spent the summer in the Hamptons where they would "field thoughts on policy" with Wall Street's wealthiest as they attended lavish fundraising events. Wall Street seems to have gotten to them.

Hillary used her time among Wall Street executives to get the political pulse of the wealthy Democratic donors who could provide the financial backbone of her likely 2016 presidential campaign.

One issue she focused on was finding out "what they thought of Mr. Obama's efforts to eliminate inversions," according to a report in the New York Times.

It appears the Clintons are taking what they heard in the private Hamptons talks to the public stage.

Speaking at the Clinton Global Initiative conference in New York City, Bill Clinton expressed the point of view of corporations that "feel duty bound to pay the lowest taxes they can pay," according to the New York Times.

"Like it or not, this inversion, this is their money," said Clinton on Tuesday, speaking of companies that have been called "unpatriotic" by President Barack Obama.

"We have the highest overall corporate tax rates in the world, and we are now the only [Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development] country that also taxes overseas earnings," said Clinton. "A lot of these executives, even if they wanted to bring the money home, they think this is crazy."

Clinton also took some blame for creating a tax system that is forcing companies to seek out lower tax rates in other countries.

"I should make full disclosure here, I signed and supported the bill that raised the corporate taxes in America to the level they are now," said Clinton.

These statements by former President Clinton reflect the type of message that Hillary Clinton may adopt for her presidential run, according to insiders who say that her message would stress corporate tax reform above the need to restrict corporate inversions.

It is also a message that clearly contrasts the rhetoric coming from the Obama administration, which has called inversions an “abuse of our tax system” and attempted to enact legislation that would restrict them.

“We should not be providing support for corporations that seek to shift their profits overseas to avoid paying their fair share of taxes,” wrote Treasury Secretary Jacob Lew in a July letter to lawmakers.

The administration announced new measures to crack down on companies that choose to move their headquarters overseas on Monday, saying that inversions “erode the U.S. tax base, unfairly placing a larger burden on all other taxpayers, including small businesses and hardworking Americans.”

Critics of the measures say that they will be ineffective, and that there is no stopping inversions as long as the United States has the highest corporate income tax rate in the developed world.

Subject: Fund for America

In advance of your board call I wanted to share a few thought about events of the past few days.

I think it is pretty clear that FFA and CDA/Progressive Media will have to abandon joint fundraising. (One person told me this had already been decided, is that so?)

George will continue to support FFA. His outstanding 1.5 million will be paid to FFA.

I think FFA should honor any existing commitment made to CDA/PMUSA and that those should be clearly defined. Is the outstanding committment to pay a further, final 500k?

I would like to understand the accounts at FFA more clearly.

My understanding is that FFA has taken in $11 million in total (3.5 from Soros; 2.5 from SEIU; 2.5 from Bing; and 2.5 from other sources). Of that, 2 million has gone to America Votes and 3.5 million has gone to CDA.

That leaves a further 5.5 million. What is the status of those funds?

At a time when we all agree that there is a need to aggressively challenge John McCain, and it has been difficult to raise money, I question why there would be the sum of undeployed capital in FFA accounts.

I understand that some of that money is already earmarked, committed, or reserved for operation expenses—but I would like to understand the budget in greater detail.

Finally,as a result of the now well-publicized dinner a George's house the other night I was approached by a donor who wants to make a challenge grant to the dinner participants. I will continue to work with that donor to raise fund from that event. This should help ease any ill will on the part of CDA/PMUSA.

I would appreciated it if one of you could answer my questions and let me know what else you may decide.

Finally, on behalf of George, I want to thank you all for taking the time to be on the board of FFA, helping to ensure that resources are well spent, when you all have day jobs!

Best,

Michael.

Good afternoon-

I wanted to loop us all together on feedback I've received from the Building Trades, specifically LIUNA, with the news yesterday that HRC is opposing the NED pipeline in New Hampshire. They are very upset. I expect to hear from the UA and IUOE soon. President O'Sullivan has cancelled his trip to Las Vegas for our strategic planning meeting on Friday and has cancelled his member canvass and rally on Saturday in Las Vegas as well. I reached out this morning offering to have HRC stop by the canvass and meet privately with Terry, and that did not change the situation.

I've been coordinating very closely with Trevor, Kristina and the policy team on our energy platform and understand that HRC being ambushed on a rope line in NH is not an accurate portrayal of her energy platform. But I have run out of the options to hold off the frustration from the trades and I think it's at a point where only HRC can clarify where she stands on some of these larger energy issues and/or clarify her position on pipelines and natural gas specifically. These issues and some of our recent nuanced answers on energy are now being viewed as "cute" by our labor partners in the building trades and it is impacting our labor support on the ground. LIUNA has disengaged.

Today, LIUNA is requesting that we put out a statement clarifying HRC's position on the NED pipeline. I think a broader statement would address the issue as well if she could put a finer point on what type of pipeline projects she supports. She has privately told the building trades that she does not oppose pipelines. Can we outline instances where a pipeline would have her support? Please note (as you know) the pipeline issue will not go away as they run through many March primary states (Ohio and Virginia, to name two). They are also concerned that she committed to not making pipeline by pipeline decisions and it now appears she is breaking to pressure and doing just that. They also point out that they have refrained in states like NH, intentionally, from putting any pressure on her around energy (like having their members on rope lines) in order to be a good partner and not escalate the situation.

Now they are also asking about natural gas and where she stands in support of this use. How does HRC see natural gas playing a role in the energy transition?

Questions:

-Could we put out a statement clarifying some of these energy positions? What are the qualifications for her to support a pipeline once examined? Where does she stand on natural gas? I told LIUNA I would circle back on the possibility of a statement today. I think until there is clarification they will remain disengaged.

-Is the Milwaukee, WI debate this week an opportunity (now past NH) to lean in and clarify some of these issues? Talking about infrastructure, prevailing wage (the building trades lost prevailing wage in WI) and energy infrastructure?

-Can she starting more publicly and regularly saying "Infrastructure" is a top issue to address in her administration? Feedback I continue to hear is that its not said enough.

I appreciate your thoughts on this, after yesterday these issues have escalated to a point where senior staff direction is now needed.

Thank you.

Clinton Firmly Opposes NED Pipeline

Portsmouth, NH -- Just days ahead of the New Hampshire primary, Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton expressed her direct opposition to the Northeast Energy Direct (NED) pipeline. When asked by Ian Ware, a student at the University of Virginia, if she supports the pipeline, Clinton responded with a firm "no."

Last December, Clinton avoided taking a position on the pipeline referring to it as a state level issue. This most recent position comes only days after the former Secretary of State referred to a future ban on extraction of coal, oil and gas on public lands as a "done deal ."

The NED Pipeline, proposed by Kinder Morgan, would carry fracked gas for 400 miles through Massachusetts and New Hampshire, making the pipeline a local concern for many New Hampshire voters. Fellow Democratic presidential candidate Bernie Sanders has repeatedly expressed his opposition to the NED pipeline and to all new fossil fuel infrastructure.

"In the last week alone, young people have pushed Clinton to take stronger stances against the fossil fuel industry than she has in her entire political career," said Yong Jung Cho, 350 Action Campaign Coordinator. "With her opposition of the NED pipeline and future extraction on public lands, it appears Secretary Clinton is beginning to understand that young voters are looking for a leader who will explain exactly how they're going to keep fossil fuels in the ground."

While many welcome Clinton's opposition to this potential fossil fuel infrastructure, activists remain concerned about her close ties to fracking and her continued acceptance of fossil fuel industry donations. Sanders has repeatedly expressed his support for a sweeping ban on fracking and has publicly pledged not to accept donations from the fossil fuel industry.

Ian Ware: Hi, Secretary Clinton. Do you support the NED pipeline?

Hillary Clinton: No.

350 Action has not endorsed any presidential candidate and is working in primary states to urge candidates for president to take bold action on climate change by pledging to keep fossil fuels in the ground and support a just transition to a 100% renewable energy.

John, as a newcomer to the major fundraising world, I found the Thursday afternoon Hillblazer event informative and a great opportunity to meet others and share stories. A big kudos to your team for putting the day together and for the work they do every day on which they reported.

I also wanted to say how much I enjoyed sharing dinner across the table from you. Perhaps you'd consider coming to Atlanta for our celebrity chef event and make it celebrity chefs! We'd love it.

But most importantly -- and I know this sounds very schmaltzy -- I wanted to say thank you for your commitment to this work, work I consider so important to assuring my daughters the country and the future they deserve.

All the best.

Wingman: McCain Aide Trains His Sights on Obama (WSJ 5/15/08)

By MONICA LANGLEY; Page A1

... When it comes to Sen. McCain's image, Mr. Salter, 53 years old, is the campaign's chief creator, shaper and enforcer. For two decades, he has been the presumed Republican nominee's speechwriter, adviser and confidant. He has helped the senator write two best-selling memoirs, on which they split the proceeds 50-50. The senator says they are "like brothers." Now that Sen. Barack Obama has emerged as the likely Democratic nominee, Mr. Salter is poised to play a large role in a general-election campaign filled with potential land mines, from race issues to Sen. McCain's age, which is 71. Early signs are that Mr. Salter will urge a feisty campaign -- in character for a man who once wrestled a persistent critic of the senator to the floor of a congressional hallway.

Mrs. McCain Sells Funds Tied to Sudan (NYT 5/15/08)

By KATE PHILLIPS

Cindy McCain, the wife of the Republican presumptive nominee for president, has sold off at least $2 million she held in funds with investments in Sudan businesses. The mutual funds — American Funds Europacific Growth and American Funds Capital World Growth and Income — have investments in companies with business in Sudan, according to the Sudan Divestment Task Force, an advocacy organization that has been working to persuade states, universities and other organizations to divest. "As soon as she was made aware, she sold it," said Brian Rogers, a spokesman for the McCain campaign.

McCain's Gift to the Green Movement (TIME 5/14/08)

By Eric Pooley

...McCain has a predicament. ...To win, he must reel in independent voters, and to do that he has to distance himself from one of the least popular Presidents in American history at a time when 80 percent of voters say the country is heading down the wrong track. So while the Democrats are busy finishing up their fight, McCain has been looking for ways to prove that his first term wouldn't be tantamount to George W. Bush's third. The trouble is, there isn't a great deal of hard evidence for this proposition. McCain supports Bush's war in Iraq (though he criticized its execution) and Bush's tax cuts for the wealthy (though he previously opposed them). He has spoken passionately against Bush's policy on torture, and condemned the record-breaking growth in government spending that has taken place on Bush's watch. But that fiscal restraint also limits McCain's policy options, which may be why his approaches to health care and the economy don't differ a great deal from the President's. When you boil it all down, global warming is the issue that sets McCain furthest apart from Bush.

How Healthy Is John McCain? (TIME 5/14/08)

By Michael Scherer and Alice Park

...He didn't pay it much mind during the heat of the 2000 Republican primary campaign. But ...Losing the GOP nomination in 2000 gave McCain time to catch and treat the cancer at an early stage, which possibly saved his life. ... Eight years later, McCain at 71 finds himself on his way to another Republican Convention, and the questions about his health are no longer secondary to his political fortunes. If he were to win in November, he would become the oldest first-term President in U.S. history. To make the issue more pronounced, his likely opponent is young enough to be his son; at 46, Barack Obama hopes to become the fifth youngest President ever.

McCain's path to victory (Washington Times 5/15/08)

Barack Obama and John McCain are ignoring Hillary Clinton's decisive win in the West Virginia primary on Tuesday and are instead campaigning against each other. In order to prevail in the general election, the presumptive Republican nominee, Mr. McCain, must unveil a bold and inspiring platform.

The GOP Must Stand for Something (WSJ 5/15/08)

By KARL ROVE

...Why is it tough sledding for Republicans? Public revulsion at GOP scandals was a large factor in the party's 2006 congressional defeat. Some brand damage remains, as does the downward pull of the president's approval ratings. But the principal elements are the Iraq war and a struggling economy.

When will McCain denounce Hagee? (Baltimore Sun 5/15/08)

By Charles Rammelkamp

Why is it that nobody seems to demand that the "Straight Talker," Sen. John McCain, denounce the Rev. John Hagee, the evangelical Christian who has blamed the Jews for their own persecution over the centuries and has called the Catholic Church the "Great Whore"? The "Straight Talker" did denounce such Christian bigots back in 2000; now, he seeks their blessing.

McCain, Obama, and the Hamas Banana Skin (Huffington Post 5/14/08)

By Daniel Levy

Senator McCain's 'Hamas attack' on Senator Obama has certainly got a lot of play. The McCain campaign even used it in a fundraising email. While neither campaign has come out of the episode bathed in glory, the way in which Senator McCain manipulated this raises some worrying questions as to just how irresponsible on national security his campaign is willing to be to score points.

McCain & the Courts (NY Post 5/14/08)

As the two Democratic presidential wannabes were busy beating each other up last week, GOP presumptive nominee John McCain cited a clear issue on which he differs from both Barack Obama and Hillary Clinton: judgeships. McCain would tap judges who don't try to legislate from the bench. He's got the right approach.

Bush's golf story 'doesn't hold water.' (ThinkProgress 5/14/08)

In an interview with Politico's Mike Allen, President Bush claimed he gave up golf after UN envoy Sergio Vieira de Mello was killed in Iraq. ...De Mello was killed on Aug. 19, 2003. The Washington Post's Dan Froomkin reports today: "Bush's story doesn't hold water": "[T]he Associated Press reported on Oct. 13, 2003, that he'd spent a "cool, breezy Columbus Day" playing "a round of golf with three long-time buddies."

As our nation's schools embrace online platforms, mobile technologies, and cloud computing to enhance and personalize learning, we need to ensure that schoolchildren can benefit from these powerful education technologies while protecting their sensitive personal information. The School Privacy Zone Summit will bring together more than 100 of the nation's educators, industry leaders, policymakers, parents, and others. The goal is to engage these key stakeholders in a constructive conversation to develop core principles, best practices, regulatory and other measures to support connected classrooms that respect and safeguard schoolchildren's privacy.

Confirmed speakers include:

- Education Secretary Arne Duncan;
- Senator Edward J. Markey;
- Joel Klein, Amplify CEO & former Chancellor NYC Dept. of Education;
- FTC Commissioner Julie Brill;
- Jon Leibowitz, former FTC Chairman;
- Cameron Evans, CTO, U.S. Education, Microsoft Corp.;
- Edmodo General Counsel Aden Fine;
- Jeff Mao, Learning Technology Policy Director, Maine Dept. of Education;
- Dr. Terry Grier, Superintendent of Houston Independent School District;

Call for Nominations for the Good Neighbor Environmental Board Membership

Nominations Due October 31, 2014

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) invites nominations of a diverse group of qualified candidates to be considered for appointment to the Good Neighbor Environmental Board (GNEB). Vacancies must be filled by March 2015, but nominations must be received by the end of October 2014 to be included in the candidate pool.

The GNEB was created in 1992 by the Enterprise for the Americas Initiative Act, and it is responsible for providing advice to the President on environmental and infrastructure issues and needs within the States contiguous to Mexico. The GNEB consists of representatives from U.S. Government agencies; the states of Arizona, California, New Mexico and Texas; academia; environmental and non-governmental entities; business and industry; and tribal and private organizations. EPA values and welcomes diversity. In an effort to obtain nominations of diverse candidates, EPA encourages nominations of women and men of all racial and ethnic groups. Members are appointed by the EPA Administrator for two-year terms.

The following criteria will be used to evaluate nominees:

- Background and experiences that would help members contribute to the diversity of perspectives on the committee (e.g., geographic, economic, social, cultural, educational, and other considerations).
- Representative of a sector or group that helps to shape border-region environmental policy or representatives of a group that is affected by border region environmental policy.
- Has extensive professional knowledge and experience with the particular issues that the GNEB examines (i.e. environmental and infrastructure issues along the U.S.-Mexico border), including the bi-national dimension of these issues.
- Bring senior level experience that will fill a need of the GNEB in bringing a new and relevant dimension to its deliberations.
- Ability to contribute approximately 10 to 15 hours per month to the GNEB's activities, including face-to-face meetings, conference calls and participation in the development of the GNEB's annual report to the President and comment letters.

If you are interested in serving on GNEB, we will need the following items to process your nomination package:

- Nominations must include a brief statement of interest, resume, curriculum vitae, or a short biography (no more than two paragraphs) describing your professional and educational qualifications, including a list of relevant activities and any current or previous service on advisory committees. In preparing your statement of interest, please describe how your background, knowledge, and experience will bring value to the work of the committee, and how these qualifications would contribute to the overall diversity of the GNEB. Also, be sure to describe any previous involvement with the Agency through employment, grant funding and/or contracting sources.
- Candidates from the academic sector must also provide a letter of recommendation authorizing the nominee to represent their institution.

Please send suggestions on nominees to the Acting Designated Federal Officer, Ann-Marie Gantner at (202) 564-4330 or gantner.ann-marie@epa.gov.

If you are not already a member, the Office of Environmental Justice would like to invite you to join the EJ ListServ. The purpose of this information tool is to notify individuals about activities at EPA in the field of environmental justice. By subscribing to this list you will receive information on EPA's activities, programs, projects grants and about environmental justice activities at other agencies. Noteworthy news items, National meeting announcements, meeting summaries of NEJAC meetings, and new publication notices will also be distributed. Postings can only be made by the Office of Environmental Justice. To request an item to be posted, send your information to environmental-justice@epa.gov and indicate in the subject "Post to EPA-EJ ListServ"

Subject: Another Scandal Looms

John:

There's yet another scandal brewing in state government, and this time it's one that could have long-lasting and serious effects.

Judges are supposed to be impartial, fair decision-makers free of political influence. But this Governor wants the power to yank a judge off the bench for making the "wrong" decision.

Iowa's tradition of fair play and impartial government is threatened by a Governor who, as one columnist recently stated, sees no limits on executive power.

Will you help me win this race? Please contribute $10, $20, $50, or whatever you can to help defeat Governor Branstad.

We've only got 84 days left in this race.

Governor Branstad's decision to turn a high-ranking administrative law judge position in the Department of Inspections and Appeals into a political appointment hurts the Iowa tradition of fairness and the rule of law in state government.

I'll work to restore the honesty and integrity to government that Iowans have rightly come to expect.

Join us as we bring an end to the most scandal-ridden administration in Iowa history. Please chip in $10, $20, or $50 today.

Thanks,

Dear John

First and foremost, I would like to wish everyone a happy, healthy and prosperous new year. 2015 has been a year of ups and downs but every new year offers an opportunity for reflection and new beginnings. In the political world, as we kick off 2016, and the Iowa Caucuses come and go, our attention will soon shift to the congressional races.

If you haven't already, I hope that you'll consider supporting my campaign. Please, add your name and pledge to be a supporter >>>

I look forward to speaking with all of you about my vision for a better Iowa and a more functional congress that works to give back to the people of Iowa and this great nation. As I begin to lay out my campaign platform I will highlight my positions on issues such as:

- Rebuilding our Middle Class
- Improving K-12 Education
- Making Post-Secondary Education more Affordable
- Addressing Energy and Environmental Issues
- Support for Family Farms; and
- Immigration Reform

Help me send the message to my opponent that this campaign should be about real issues and positive change >>>

I look forward to running a clean, positive campaign that lays out a clear path to victory in November and draws a positive distinction between myself and Steve King. I wish you all a safe holiday weekend and look forward to seeing you in 2016.

Update on debates—statement below—can we get it teed up, proofed and blasted out?

As for key points, I'll reach back out to the people who I got looped in with, but want to give you the update on the background points, so if you get the questions:

- 1) This is us trying to move the ball forward and end the debate. We approved of all of the things they wanted in their initial request—no weekends, the specific months, etc. And while we believe Flint is a good place to do a debate, we are fine to actually sit down and come to agreement on dates and cities and believe that that can be done. In the mean time we should do NH and we will get this done.
- 2) Would do this on deep background, but we believe the Michigan date was rejected by the DNC based on scheduling and we never got it, so we didn't have a chance to reject it. No specifics had been agreed to—but we are willing to sit down and come to some mutually agreed upon sites.

(Also, as an FYI—Mr. I don't want to be a partisan attack dog, Jake Sullivan, drafted the below)

Statement from John Podesta

There is nothing worse than a debate about debates. From our perspective, this is pretty simple. The people of New Hampshire wanted a debate. We said Secretary Clinton would be there. The Sanders campaign said their candidate would only come if we agreed to three additional debates, one each in March, April, and May. We agreed to that. The Sanders campaign further asked that these debates not take place on weekends or holidays. We agreed to that as well, and offered date windows accordingly. The Sanders campaign proposal has been met in all respects. Now they refuse to take yes for an answer, apparently because they are intent on avoiding a debate in New Hampshire. Enough of the games. We are prepared to show up for a debate next Thursday and for three additional debates in the months ahead, which we can all work together to schedule. We hope Senator Sanders will be there too. If the Sanders campaign decides to reject the debate next week, we'll let them answer to the voters of New Hampshire.

One additional note. We made the modest suggestion that one of the three additional debates take place in Flint, Michigan to shine a spotlight on what's happening there and in places like Flint around the country. The Sanders campaign never responded. We're not sure why, but if they'd rather not debate in Flint, we're certainly willing to mutually agree on three other locations.

Subject: Thoughts on San Fran EQ Cap Breakfast?

Hi John--

Dave Chen would like to know if you're open to doing a 7:30 am private breakfast at the Cavallo Point Hotel before the conference (which necessitates you staying there, I imagine!). In Dave's words, "We would like to organize 4-5 people representing or managing large pools of capital and influence to meet him." We don't currently have any other breakfast prospects for Tuesday morning.

Here are a few examples of who he intends to invite. Can get you more details if you need:

Marie Chandoha
President and CEO, Charles Schwab Investment Management Inc.

Prior to becoming President and CEO of Schwab Investments in 2010, Chandoha served as the global head of fixed-income at BlackRock. She has previously served in leadership roles at Wells Capital Management, Goldman Sachs, and Credit Suisse First Boston. Chandoha is a trustee of the California chapter of the Nature Conservancy. She received her BA in Economics from Harvard.

Richard (Dick) Daniels
Executive Vice President and Chief Information Officer, Kaiser Permanente

Dick Daniels became the CIO of Kaiser Permanente in February 2015. Daniels had served as the interim CIO since September 2014 when his predecessor, Philip Fasano, left to become the CIO of AIG. Before his appointment, he had served as the senior vice president of enterprise shared services and the senior vice president of information technology at Kaiser Permanente. Daniels is a graduate of Texas State University.

Elon Musk
Entrepreneur, CEO/CTO of SpaceX, CEO of Tesla Motors, Chairman of Solar City

Elon Musk currently serves as the CEO/CTO of SpaceX, the CEO of Tesla Motors, and the Chairman of Solar City. He is also a cofounder of PayPal and Zip2. Musk's political efforts have focused primarily on space research and exploration, for which he has made significant donations to both democrats and republicans. Musk has expressed his belief that the government should no longer subsidize environmentally friendly companies (like his own Tesla Motors and Solar City), but rather should institute a carbon tax. Musk studied Physics and Economics at the University of Pennsylvania. He is originally from South Africa, and currently lives with his wife Talulah Riley an actress, and his six children in Los Angeles.

Dear Friends and Colleagues,

They say that imitation is the highest form of flattery, and if that's the case then Progress Michigan and Alliance for a Better Minnesota should be very proud of their work. In these two states right-wing groups have attempted to create communication organizations to counter our affiliates' work. As hard as the right wing may try they cannot stop what we do every day – make progress happen, and happen NOW.

As always, let me know what you think, or even better, contribute to us here.

Is the Michigan Freedom Fund the Conservative Response to Progress Michigan?

On August 23rd's edition of Off the Record, Tim Skubick discussed what the struggle for power between Republican Party stalwarts and Tea Party activists means for Medicaid expansion in Michigan. Chad Livengood, a reporter at the conservative-leaning Detroit News, cited The Michigan Freedom Fund as evidence of a Republican party realignment. Specifically, he said "They've gone from Right to Work debate, to now being the conservative, right-wing answer to Progress Michigan." That's right – the fact that Progress Michigan is calling out Republicans and holding them accountable has inspired conservatives to attempt to do the same.

According to the Detroit News, the Michigan Freedom Fund has increased their capacity and staff members in order to branch out into political fights with Democrats. While promoting freedom might be the group's stated goal, it seems that their true intention is to attack Democrats. This includes Representative Alberta Tinsley-Talabi and gubernatorial candidate Mark Schauer. Unlike Progress Michigan, the Michigan Freedom Fund's actions may be motivated by a fear of losing rather than a need for accountability. Their attempt to bring up seven-year-old campaign finance violations against Schauer shows that Republican Governor Rick Snyder is in trouble and is trying any tactic he can to paint Schauer in a negative light.

Right-Wing Groups Take Tips from Alliance for a Better Minnesota

In Minnesota, right-wing groups have been attempting to copy Alliance for a Better Minnesota for years. This year, however, three groups have been successful in uniting corporate and business interests with common messages and themes. These include: Minnesota Jobs Coalition, United for Jobs, and Minnesota Action Network. The MN Jobs Coalition seems to be imitating ABM's rapid response use of social networks. Recently, they have been hitting Democratic Governor Dayton on Twitter about the farm equipment repair tax, "secret" trips, and regarding the Lieutenant Governor re-election. United for Jobs is a new advocacy organization that was formed during the 2013 legislative session. They represent corporate special interests and their main focus has been on taxes. This is seen in TV ads they ran against the Governor’s tax bill that increased income taxes on the richest 2% of Minnesotans, and the petition they are currently running to repeal all three business taxes.

Lastly, the MN Action Network is the Minnesota arm of former Senator Norm Coleman’s American Action Network. This group has been consolidating conservative power and building funds for paid election communications for next year. In a fundraising letter , media mogul Stan Hubbard and CEO Tom Rosen each committed $50,000 to flip the Governor’s seat and legislature to Republican control. With conservative groups increasing their communication efforts, it is extremely important that we continue to hold right-wing groups and politicians accountable.

Hi Winnie,

I hope you are doing well and that everything is great at CAP. And thank you again for your help a year ago when we were thinking about how best to engage with other companies on LGBTQ issues at Dropbox.

As I witness the rise of Donald Trump on the national stage, I've become increasingly convinced that working for Hillary Clinton is more important now than ever. Today, I applied for a role at her headquarters as a data analyst, but would honestly consider speechwriting, research, field organizing, and other roles as well. The contrast between her and any of the potential GOP nominees is so striking that I'm compelled to do something more than simply donate and make phone calls on her behalf.

I'm not sure if you have any connections to the campaign, but if it's possible to surface my interest I would be incredibly grateful. Every four years we hear the same thing: "The stakes have never been higher." This time around, that seems like a gross understatement.

All the best,

Ben

P.S. I've attached my resume for your reference. Please let me know if anything else would be helpful.

Hi Neera! Hope all's well with you and the family in this pre-election year...

We have a possible reason to visit Washington DC for an event on Fri, 17-Apr-2015.

Ideally, for us, we'd fly in that Friday morning, stay the weekend and come back home Sunday night (or) Monday morning.

Would we have a chance to meet on any of those dates?

We could fly in a day earlier on Thu, 16-Apr-2015 if that works better.

If possible, we'd love to also meet John & Mary Podesta.

They've always been so gracious and kind to us.

Email addresses I have for both of them are no longer valid.

Please tell them we asked about them and would be delighted to host an evening on any of those days.

Of course, we'd be tickled if we could all get together...

Warm Regards, Ashok

In case you didn't know, he has a very large (and very interesting) collection of political pins and buttons. Sara kindly gave us what she could get her hands on. Glad this helped sales. We'd love to have others if you have them.

2. Tomorrow, I plan on joining a call to talk through road processes and approvals with Team WJC but in prep for Thursday in Iowa, we would love to have Jon, the videographer you met yesterday in NH, join you for the organizing events in Iowa. Tina, Angel, Jon - what do you think ? Would that be OK? Let me know and we can make the necessary travel arrangements for him to get to Iowa tomorrow or Thurs AM.

Subject: Why I'm giving to LCV

Dear John,

After hearing recently from my friends at LCV, I'm so energized by this campaign that I had to drop you a note.

Last year, historic clean energy provisions to repeal billions in subsidies to Big Oil and to increase our use of renewable energy passed the U.S. House overwhelmingly...but stalled in the U.S. Senate. That's where we really need change.

I'm giving to LCV so we can have 60 pro-environment leaders in the Senate—a filibuster-proof majority. Only then will we be able to finally pass legislation to reduce our dependence on oil and combat global warming.

Will you get on board too and help LCV reach its \$40,000 goal before October 31?

In communities across America, people like you and me are taking charge of our environmental future, building coalitions, and taking bold action. Because we know that protecting our planet is a moral imperative.

So what's been missing? Leadership from Washington. Especially in the U.S. Senate.

The power to change it is in your hands. Contribute to LCV today.

Your gift will give LCV the resources they need to not only elect a pro-environment White House and Congress, but to work with elected leaders in the months ahead to solve our energy crisis.

We can't let up. We're within striking distance of those 60 Senate votes that will pass the new clean energy policies we need to strengthen our economy, reduce our dependence on oil, and protect our planet from global warming pollution. This kind of opportunity may never come along again.

Sincerely,

Robert Redford

New York Times: "For Hillary Clinton, John Podesta Is a Right Hand With a Punch"

By Peter Baker

February 15, 2015

WASHINGTON — Not that he's competitive or anything, but one Friday evening, John D. Podesta, a top adviser to President Obama, announced at a White House meeting that he would finish a 10-mile race that weekend in so many minutes. Needling Denis McDonough, the president's chief of staff, Mr. Podesta added: "I don't know what Denis is going to run."

Sure enough, Mr. Podesta finished in an hour and 26 minutes, beating Mr. McDonough, 21 years his junior, by six minutes. So as Mr. Podesta, 66, packed up his West Wing office last week, he jokingly blamed his departure on a subsequent loss. "I knew it was time to look at leaving the White House when Denis McDonough beat me in 12K Jingle Bell race," he said on Twitter.

Wiry, ascetic, profane and relentless, John Podesta has become the Democratic Party's marathon man in more ways than one. He helped save Bill Clinton's presidency from the fires of scandal and impeachment. He spent the last year trying to salvage Barack Obama's presidency from gridlock and malaise. And now he has handed in his White House pass to try to create a Hillary Rodham Clinton presidency from the ashes of her last failed campaign.

Perhaps no other unelected Democrat has shaped his party as much over the last two decades. As Mr. Clinton's chief of staff, as founder of the left-leaning Center for American Progress and most recently as Mr. Obama's counselor, Mr. Podesta has pushed his party toward a more aggressive approach to both policy and politics. "He's a competitive cat," Mr. McDonough said.

Mr. Podesta will need that competitive streak if he becomes chairman of Mrs. Clinton's presidential campaign, as expected. It will fall to him to impose discipline on the sprawling and fractious Clinton universe, including the candidate and her famously undisciplined husband. And it will fall to Mr. Podesta to manage relations between a president focusing on his legacy and his would-be successor focusing on the next election.

"He believes in and uses power in a way that many Democrats are too pusillanimous to do," said Paul Begala, a former Clinton White House aide and longtime friend. "He's not afraid to use power, and ruthlessly if necessary. I think he's as good a political guy as I've ever seen. He's the real thing."

To many Democrats, last week's blowup over fund-raising practices in the Clinton orbit emphasized the need for adult supervision, recalling the internal strife that helped doom Mrs. Clinton's primary bid against Mr. Obama seven years ago. Her 2008 campaign was riven by clashing rivals more intent on fighting each other than opposing candidates. For months, no single aide was truly in charge.

In recruiting Mr. Podesta, Mrs. Clinton is signaling that she will impose a more orderly structure this time. "When John speaks, both longtime Clinton supporters like me and people new to the circle will know that he's speaking for her," said Harold Ickes, a top adviser to both Clintons for years. "That's very important. That didn't happen in 2008, with some of the resulting consequences."

No one doubts Mr. Podesta's toughness. During his previous White House stint, colleagues joked that he was sometimes replaced by his evil twin "Skippy." And as someone who met Mr. Clinton during Joseph D. Duffey's unsuccessful Senate campaign in Connecticut in 1970, he is one of the few people with the longevity and stature to talk bluntly with the Clintons when they mess up. "The fact that he's saying it would carry an enormous amount of weight," Mr. Ickes said. "Both of them consider him a very straight shooter."

Republican operatives view Mr. Podesta as a liberal who will tug Mrs. Clinton away from the political center and make it harder for her to argue that she represents a fresh start after Mr. Obama's administration.

"You've got to admire someone willing to move from one sinking ship to another that's taking on water before it's even left port," said Michael Short, a spokesman for the Republican National Committee. "Voters overwhelmingly don't want a third term for President Obama's liberal agenda, but it's clear that's what Hillary Clinton and John Podesta intend to give them."

Mr. Podesta, who declined to be interviewed because he is "superstitious" about profiles, was born in Chicago to an Italian-American father and Greek-American mother. His father never finished high school and worked in factories, pushing his children to go to college. While Mr. Podesta is a practicing Catholic like his father, he embraces his mother's side as well, displaying Greek Orthodox icons in his White House office and adopting her love of cooking.

He has attributed his drive and temper to an ethnic upbringing during which yelling at the dinner table over politics was acceptable. He came of age in the tumult of the 1960s. While studying at Knox College in Illinois, he and other students "debated, ranted, chanted, protested," as he put it in a 1998 commencement address, and he campaigned for Eugene McCarthy, the antiwar presidential candidate, in 1968.

Mr. Podesta earned a law degree from Georgetown University, where he still teaches on the side, and went to work for figures like Senators Patrick J. Leahy of Vermont and Tom Daschle of South Dakota. With his brother, Tony Podesta, he founded the Podesta Group, which has become a powerhouse lobbying firm with extensive corporate ties.

After going to work for Mr. Clinton, he rose to chief of staff, presiding over a White House rocked by revelations about the president's sexual adventures with Monica Lewinsky. To keep the staff focused on business, he threatened to fire anyone caught talking about the scandal. But he understood before colleagues did that they would lose a House vote on impeachment despite popular support for Mr. Clinton, and he oversaw a strategy emphasizing the partisanship of the process to delegitimize the House vote and win a largely party-line acquittal in the Senate.

After leaving the White House, Mr. Podesta founded the Center for American Progress, an organization that married policy and politics. "He's a policy wonk's policy wonk," said Sarah Rosen Wartell, a co-founder who added he was also "very much a doer." Enlisting wealthy donors like George Soros and Herb and Marion Sandler, Mr. Podesta made the center and himself power players in liberal politics.

In 2008, Mr. Obama tapped Mr. Podesta to run his transition, to the chagrin of the loyalists who had helped beat Mrs. Clinton for the nomination. Mr. Obama tried to recruit him to join the administration, an entreaty he resisted until early 2014 when the presidency was flailing and he agreed to come on board for a year to help turn it around.

Mr. Podesta came with a strategy he and Ms. Wartell had outlined in a 2010 report about how a president could use his executive authority more aggressively without waiting for Congress. He also took on select projects, notably climate change and privacy in a big-data world.

For Mr. McDonough, the chief of staff now occupying the corner office with the patio and the fireplace that once belonged to Mr. Podesta, having a predecessor around, “a guy who’s seen it all,” proved a benefit. “John is always thinking a couple steps ahead,” Mr. McDonough said.

Passionate about environmental issues, Mr. Podesta used his perch to help advance new regulations on power plants, negotiate a carbon reduction agreement with China, create the world’s largest marine refuge in the Pacific Ocean and protect stretches of Alaskan waters and wildlife refuge from drilling.

“It’s not clear to me he slept,” said Carol M. Browner, formerly Mr. Obama’s top environmental adviser.

In a series of Twitter posts on Friday listing his 10 favorite memories in the Obama White House, he devoted half to environmental issues. A longtime aficionado of extraterrestrial lore — he kept a little shrine to “The X-Files” in his Clinton White House office — he also wrote that “my biggest failure of 2014: Once again not securing the #disclosure of the UFO files. #thetruthisstilloutthere.”

If he cannot find proof of alien life, then he will test the maxim that a two-term president and his party’s next nominee always end up at odds. Al Gore did not want Mr. Clinton campaigning for him in 2000, just as Senator John McCain did not want George W. Bush campaigning for him in 2008.

Mr. Podesta may serve as a bridge between Mr. Obama and Mrs. Clinton, hoping to ease the natural frictions that arise as a candidate tries to distinguish herself from a president with improving but still mediocre poll numbers. He has played the role before. He negotiated on Mr. Obama’s behalf an agreement with Mr. Clinton to limit his international activities while Mrs. Clinton served as secretary of state. And later, when Mr. Clinton went to North Korea to free two Americans, the White House sent Mr. Podesta along to keep tabs.

For the next two years, as he races another marathon as Mrs. Clinton’s top adviser, Mr. Podesta will have the advantage of the relationship he forged with Mr. McDonough, Mr. Obama’s top adviser.

“He’s a great runner,” Mr. McDonough said. “The guy’s made me much better at everything I do in this job. And he’s made me a better runner, too.”

Sen. Rand Paul (R-Ky.) celebrated Valentine's Day by throwing some shade at Hillary Clinton. Paul on Saturday tweeted out a link to a fake Clinton Pinterest page packed with unflattering images of the former secretary of state alongside memes culled from around the Internet.

One page categorized as "Inspirational Quotes" includes a fake Valentine's Day card, sourced to the right-wing Upworthy-esque Independent Journal Review, with a maniacally smiling Clinton and the caption, "I've Benghaziing at you!"

A Congressional report last year cleared the Obama administration of a Benghazi coverup, though some on the right continue to use the terror attack to snipe at Clinton, the presumptive 2016 Democratic presidential nominee.

McCain Puts Oil Companies and Their Record Profits before American Interests

Like Bush, John McCain continues to promote policies to help Big Oil. After endorsing Bush and Big Oil's off-shore drilling campaign, contributions from the oil and gas industry gushed to John McCain. America cannot afford more of the same Bush policies. See attached research.

While families struggle, McCain, like Bush, puts Big Oil first.

- After McCain adopted Bush's off-shore drilling policy, donations from the oil and gas industry flowed to McCain's campaign. According to the Washington Post , McCain received more than $1 million from the oil & gas industry last month – more than three fourths coming after he reversed his position on drilling. McCain has now accepted more than \$2 million in donations from Big Oil.
- McCain surrounds himself Big Oil lobbyists. At least 29 top advisers or fundraisers for McCain's campaign have lobbied for Big Oil. They have represented 4 of the 9 oil companies in the 2008 Fortune 200.
- Like Bush, McCain offers billions in tax cuts for Big Oil, but no relief for families. According to the Center for American Progress Action Fund , McCain's tax plan gives nearly $4 billion in tax breaks to the top five American oil companies, but gives families very little. Economists have panned McCain's gas tax holiday, saying it won't help families with gas prices.
- Oil company profits skyrocket while families get left behind. Oil companies' profits continue to rise as the price of gasoline hovers at $4.00 a gallon. Exxon Mobil even reported their highest-ever three month profit – over $11.6 billion.

McCain is out of touch on Americans' energy needs.

- McCain ignored Americans' energy concerns. McCain missed all 11 energy related Senate votes in 2007, including votes related to automobile fuel economy, offshore Virginia drilling, refinery construction, renewable electricity mandates, energy efficiency, liquefied coal and support for biofuels.

Subject: Re: REMINDER: Norman Birnbaum Seminar

Dear Colleagues,

If you are free this afternoon I encourage you to come to the last of Norman's sessions at 1:20. Much more than memoir, they are also rich intellectual and political histories of the US and Europe. This last session links up those histories with Georgetown University which—lucky for us—Norman has made his intellectual home since 1979.

Hope to see you there, Naomi

Subject: REMINDER: Norman Birnbaum Seminar

Dear Colleagues,

There has been a change in the schedule for Norman Birnbaum's seminar series on his memoir From The Bronx To Oxford—And Not Quite Back.

The final session will be held this Thursday, from 1:20pm – 3:00pm, in McDonough 588. The chapter to be discussed can be found:

Norman Birnbaum Memoir Chapter 17

Professor Birnbaum asked that the following note be forwarded along with this reminder.

NOTE FROM Professor Birnbaum:

16 November 2015

I write just after hearing the President's press conference ---and the vulgarities of his questioners. I can imagine that for him, noon of 20 January 1917 cannot come quickly enough. The difficulty is, alas, that it will also befall us...

In the meantime, the final session of the seminar on my memoir project is this week and I am, again, grateful to those who have come. There are at least three themes on which I could close. The first would entail Transatlantic politics, recollected. The second would involve some thoughts on my decades at the Law Center. The third would involve time travel or, indeed, emigration—to that strange country, the USA in the twenty first century.

Upon reflection, I think I could best serve by talking about my Law Center experience. I have not completed that chapter, since I was unexpectedly asked to fill in for Father Orsy who was giving a seminar on the Philosophy of Law and I had to go back to texts (beginning with Locke) I once knew well.

I am asking Anna Selden to send the initial pages. Again, please feel free to come even if the usual constraints prevent you from the reading.

Sincerely,

Norman Birnbaum

Subject: good news, bad news

Good news: "Half In Ten" was written about in a publication with 15 million readers!

Bad news: It's the National Enquirer.

JOHN EDWARDS LOVE CHILD

UPDATE: The NATIONAL ENQUIRER is revealing new details about the political scoop we broke yesterday - the secret meeting between Vice Presidential candidate John Edwards and Rielle Hunter.

A team of ENQUIRER reporters caught the married ex-senator visiting his mistress and secret love child late Monday night at the Beverly Hilton hotel in Los Angeles hotel.

As we reported previously, Edwards arrived at the hotel at 9:45 p.m. (PST) Monday, driven by a friend in a BMW, and was seen by ENQUIRER reporter Alan Butterfield.

We can now reveal that the man who drove Edwards was Bob McGovern, the same man who drove Rielle to the hotel from Santa Barbara and rented her room in his name.

He was driving a 1999 four-door midnight blue BMW.

Said Butterfield: "The car had a baby seat in the back for Rielle's infant. He pulled into the parking lot, took a ticket from the automated machine, pulled forward, and stopped right after the parking gate lowered. Edwards got out of the passenger side, walked around the front of the car and went in a side entrance near the swimming pool.

"McGovern parked the car and then slowly walked back inside the hotel and went upstairs."

In the aftermath of our exclusive story, the NATIONAL ENQUIRER has now learned:

* Edwards' advisers are "spitting mad and furious" that his late-night escapades have made international headlines because it could derail his chances of becoming Barack Obama's running mate.

* Edwards has not explained his whereabouts to any members of other news media outlets who have been trying to follow up on the story.

* His mistress, blonde divorcee Rielle, meanwhile, has returned to her home in Santa Barbara, Calif., and sources say she is "in despair" that Edwards might cut off contact with her because their latest rendezvous has been exposed in the media.

After we posted the details of Edwards shocking meeting with Rielle, political sources close to Edwards revealed how he was candidly scolded by his advisors hours later.

One political source divulged: "His advisors told him they were furious that this had been brought out by the NATIONAL ENQUIRER right when Obama is considering whether he's V.P. material with the Democratic National Convention (Aug. 25-28 in Denver) only weeks away.

"From what I hear, John was read the riot act by his people. The fallout from this could cost him the job of running mate. They told him Obama doesn't want to pick someone and be embarrassed by the choice. This 'bimbo eruption' at this critical time will do him absolutely no good.

"While his people are not trying to tell him how to live his personal life, this baggage isn't going to help him convince Obama that he's the right guy to be his veep."

A day after the incident, Edwards traveled to Denver for an appearance at the University of Denver in support of the anti-poverty campaign, called Half in Ten. The very first question put to him at the event was about whether he'd become Obama's running mate.

Edwards was quoted as saying: "I'm not seeking the job. I don't expect to be asked...but anything that Sen. Obama would ask me to do, whether it's in his campaign or in his presidency, I would consider seriously."

But Edwards made no official comment on our bombshell disclosure about his late-night antics less than 24 hours earlier.

Said another source: "He's going out of his way to avoid discussing it - he knows whatever he says will come back to haunt him. If he denies being there, he doesn't want to be found out to be a liar."

In other new details, the NATIONAL ENQUIRER has learned that McGovern, the man who picked up Edwards and dropped him off at the hotel, has become one of Rielle's closest friends.

McGovern reserved rooms 246 and 252 at the Beverly Hilton under his name. Rielle was in one room and McGovern was in another with her baby. This allowed her and Edwards to spend time alone.

Another source said: "Bob McGovern is someone Rielle met in Santa Barbara when she recently moved there. He's become one of her closest friends and agreed to help her see Edwards."

Rielle has not yet made any public comments about her Monday night visit from Edwards

Subject: Tell Orbitz: Stop sponsoring FOX's climate lies

LEAGUE OF CONSERVATION VOTERS

Dear John,

"For those who love to travel the globe, protecting it comes with the turf." ¹

So says Orbitz, the online travel site that touts its sustainability measures, encourages customers to offset the carbon emissions from travel, promotes "eco-tourism," green hotels, and hybrid rental cars.

Unfortunately, Orbitz undermines all of those laudable efforts by advertising on FOX News, the most pernicious and voluminous source of climate denial misinformation. FOX's anti-climate agenda is actively slowing our ability to protect the planet. And green-touting Orbitz sponsors climate denial with every ad they run on FOX!

Orbitz has a choice. It can stand by its commitment to protect our planet or they can continue to support FOX News with its advertising dollars. We think the choice is a no brainer. That's why we've joined with CREDO Action to demand that Orbitz pull their ads from FOX now.

Tell Orbitz: Stop sponsoring FOX's anti-climate agenda.

Climate change is taking a huge toll across the world, in so many of the places that Orbitz encourages us to visit and cherish - from ocean acidification that is destroying the great barrier reef, to rising oceans literally drowning pacific island nations, to the retreat of glaciers from the Alps to Glacier National Park to Alaska, to shorter ski seasons in Colorado, and the ferocious storms that devastate our cities, like New Orleans.

So it's a bitter irony that Orbitz would choose to support FOX, which is doing so much to speed this destruction, and undermine the political will that we as a country need to effectively fight the oncoming climate catastrophe.

FOX's Washington managing editor literally directed his staff to deny that the earth is warming. ² FOX has lied about the earth's temperature record, distorted scientific works and the statements of scientists, repeatedly suggest that snow disproves global warming, and promoted the bogus climate-gate scandal. ³

And of course FOX's parent company News Corp donated one million dollars to the rabidly anti-climate Chamber of Commerce, helping to elect to congress the largest wave of climate deniers in history.

Unless Orbitz is on a permanent vacation in Opposite Land, that's not how a company committed to protecting the planet should spend their money.

Tell Orbitz: Stop sponsoring FOX's anti-climate agenda.

Orbitz claims to be committed to "helping raise environmental awareness." ⁴ And Orbitz was proud to say last year that their customers donated $50,000 to CarbonFund.org to buy carbon offsets. ⁵

But how much would it cost to offset the disastrous effects of FOX's misinformation?

Orbitz can't have it both ways. It's time for them live up their principles, and book their ads on a return trip from FOX's state of climate-denial.

Please Join LCV and CREDO Action to help make sure Orbitz gets the message, and knows that those of us who really do care about the planet are watching closely. Click here to sign the petition.

Sincerely,

Gene Karpinski

Subject: TARP Loans / US Auto Industry and Technology Incubation

The following message was sent to you using the Georgetown University directory web site. If you have questions about how this email was sent, please see <http://contact.georgetown.edu/about/>

Dear Mr. Podesta,

I am writing you from a health care perspective in reference to the recent CNN debate between Secretary Clinton and Senator Sanders on the importance of TARP Loans to GM and Chrysler. In 2008 / 2009, I wrote members of Congress, The White House, Dr. Lawrence Summers, Treasury Secretary Geithner and Steve Ratner in support of the loans.

As technology moves along a continuum, investment in aerospace and automotive engineering has indirectly contributed to important innovation in delivery of health care in the US and world economy.

For example, GPS created during WWII for navigation in transportation has been adapted for applications in advanced Radiological Imaging and Radiation Therapy producing targeted therapies for treatment of Heart Disease, Cancer and Neurodegenerative Disease.

Along with direct employment, the US auto industry plays an important role as a technology incubator across many industrial sectors in our economy.

May I forward to you an original letter for Secretary Clinton ? I anticipate additional questions regarding TARP loans will resurface later in the year during the Presidential debates.

Thank you for your kind attention.

Please know I look forward to your response.

Raj Goyle for Kansas State House

Dear Friends,

Thanks for your support! In 2006 we achieved one of the most impressive campaign victories in Kansas. As this new campaign season begins in earnest, I am working hard as always to give the voters of the 87th the representation they deserve.

I am out in neighborhoods every week, knocking on hundreds of doors and talking to Republicans, Democrats and Independents alike. One thing is clear: Kansans are hungry for the kind of fresh ideas, common sense, and mainstream values that we have brought to the Legislature.

Our commitment to change has threatened the defenders of the status quo. They have made me a high priority and committed significant resources to my opponent. Working together, we can fight back and continue to have a positive impact in the lives of all Kansans.

Please consider donating to continue our movement for change.

Thanks to you, the Legislature finally took on Fred Phelps by passing a law I authored that restricts where picketers can protest at a funeral. I have worked to help to lower taxes, create jobs, and strengthen our schools. I am proud to have been recognized for a perfect attendance record, never missing a vote in two years.

The Wichita Eagle has recognized my leadership in the State House, calling me a "rising star" for my forward-thinking commitment to Kansas.

All of this was possible because of your support. But we cannot take these gains for granted. Don't let our opponents roll back the progress we have achieved.

Help me continue the fight for common sense solutions in Kansas.

Thank you and hope to see you soon,

Subject: Auto bailout, McCain linked to Rashid Khalidi, New ACORN ad, Tito the Builder claims Obama's philosophy is Hugo Chavez's

Highlights:

1. FNC: John and Cindy McCain on Hannity and Colmes Discuss Socialism, Straight Talk and the Liberal Media
JOHN MCCAIN: Certainly it's part of the socialist creed, philosophy, to share the wealth.
2. ABC: Tim Pawlenty says McCain would support bailout for auto industry
TIM PAWLENTY: Senator McCain has spoken of support, for targeted and specific relief for the auto industry, specifically as it relates to letting them transition to next technology cars that are low emissions or zero emissions.
3. MSNBC: Tax Documents Published by Huffington Post show McCain also has Ties to Rashid Khalidi
DAVID SHUSTER: In another development, the Huffington Post has published essentially some tax documents that indicate that John McCain, while he was in charge of the International Republican Institute, actually gave grant money to Khalidi.
4. FNC: New ACORN voter suppression ad, RNC responds by attacking ACORN's "illegal activities", ACORN promises no illegal votes this election
ERIC SHAWN: They say that an untold number of Americans have been purged from the voter rolls, they're predicting there could be problems six days from now, and they say that is voter suppression. They also started an advertisement that will be showing on some cable networks, including an ad buy on the Fox News Channel.
5. FNC: Tito the Builder claims Obama's principles are like Hugo Chavez's, doesn't want a handout or "government crumbs"
TITO MUNO: I'm a janitor and what the government is going to do to me is give me a handout, give me a bunch of crumbs. They say, oh poor Tito, ok, you stay down there, you don't know anything, you're not good, you don't have a dream, just stay down there, we'll throw you some crumbs. No, I want to have an opportunity.

Highlight #1

John and Cindy McCain on Hannity and Colmes Discuss Socialism, Straight Talk and the Liberal Media (FNC, 10/28/08 9:00pm)

SEAN HANNITY: All right. One week from today. ...

J. MCCAIN: We're very excited.

[...]

HANNITY: There's actually a media study that shows that you have had extreme media bias and we'll get to that in a minute. ...

[...]

J. MCCAIN: ... Hershey, Pennsylvania — this place was rocking, not only for me, by the way, but Sarah Palin. She has ignited something really incredible in American politics, in my view.

HANNITY:... she had huge crowds and a lot of enthusiasm.... And the issue of redistribution of wealth. It first came up with "Joe the Plumber" in an interview on "Good Morning America" and then, of course, this tape in 2001 that came out yesterday.

You've used the term "Senator Redistribution." Explain what you mean by that.

J. MCCAIN: Well, I mean, it's very obvious from a long record of being in the far left-hand lane ... he has a clear record of being the most liberal senator in the United States Senate. We've seen that act before ... with George McGovern, Jimmy Carter and others in the liberal left. They think that the solution to America's problems is to take money from one group of Americans and give it to another. Now, that has been proven to be a very bad idea in America, but also in other countries. So it's an idea that you can somehow help everybody's lives by taking money from those who have through hard work, spending all their lives building up some wealth that they can give to their kids. But more importantly, create jobs. When people in America, like "Joe the Plumber" are able to buy his boss' business, he creates jobs and shares wealth and expands wealth that way, rather than...

HANNITY: It's amazing...

J. MCCAIN: ... rather than saying, you can't have this money, I've got to give it to somebody else.

HANNITY: It is amazing how "Joe the Plumber" — you know, everywhere I go — and I saw a sign here today, "I'm Sally the Homemaker," I'm somebody the Bartender. And I hold up signs whenever I go, "I'm Sean the Loudmouth Talk Show Host."

J. MCCAIN: You know, it's amazing. This "Joe the Plumber" event has really been a catalyst. It really has. You know we look back on political campaigns. "I paid for this microphone, Mr. Breen." Ed Muskie crying outside The Union Leader, or whatever it was. You know, there are moments when something happens and clearly Senator Obama going to "Joe the Plumber's" driveway and him getting an answer that clearly he didn't like. And by the way, the way that they attacked him? Please.

HANNITY: They've gone after him pretty hard, they've mocked him on the campaign trail. There's been apparently issues of investigating his background.

J. MCCAIN: Oh yes.

HANNITY: And I thought Governor Palin had it bad at one point when they sent a mini army up to Alaska to investigate her.

Well, here's...

J. MCCAIN: And, of course, if anybody in the media, much less "Joe the Plumber," asks a tough question, then they're boycotted, they pull their ads.

HANNITY: I want to get to that, because Senator Obama said it's a tragedy "... that redistribution of wealth was not pursued by the Supreme Court."

J. MCCAIN: That's what's scary. You know, a lot of people believe that there's going to be three vacancies on the United States Supreme Court. And some of the thoughts and writings and statements by Senator Obama about how it's the job of the judiciary to be "redistributed?" But I think — fast forward after just a short time ago. Senator Obama opposed Justices Roberts and Alito. And he said on ideological grounds. And Sean, a true confession. I voted for Justices Breyer and Ginsburg. Not because I agreed with their philosophy, but because they were qualified to serve.

HANNITY: Let me ask you a couple of simple questions about this redistribution of wealth of "Senator Redistribution." Is it socialism?

J. MCCAIN: Certainly it's part of the socialist creed, philosophy, to share the wealth. Now if Senator Obama's a "socialist" is something that I'll let those theoreticians decide.

But the fact is that it's a far-left liberal view that you need to take money from one group of Americans and give it to another, to take people who have built up through their labor and their hard work and their dedication to the free enterprise system and take it away from them.

HANNITY: But you know, 40 percent of Americans — for example, the bottom 50 percent of wage earners...

J. MCCAIN: Pay no taxes.

HANNITY: Well, 40 percent pay no taxes. The bottom 50 percent pay 2.9 percent. The top 10 percent pay 70 percent. Those are the IRS numbers, most recent numbers. We almost have redistribution already. But under the Obama plan, as I understand it, the 40 percent that pay no taxes are going to get a check.

HANNITY: Is that welfare?

J. MCCAIN: Where does the money come from? It comes from a printing press, but eventually it comes from...

HANNITY: From people.

J. MCCAIN: Yes. And then Barney Frank said we're going to find a lot of rich people out there to tax. Then he's going — they said they're going to cut defense and raise taxes. ...

PART 2

HANNITY: You quote yourself a "foot soldier" in the Reagan revolution.

J. MCCAIN: Yes, sir.

HANNITY: All right. When President Reagan took office, we had pretty tough economic times.

J. MCCAIN: Jack Kennedy came to office and said cut the capital gains tax, they did and revenues increased. Now Senator Obama, talking to Charlie Gibson, Charlie Gibson said, why would you want to raise capital gains taxes? There's a 100 million people involved in that. And he said because of fairness, even though, as Charlie Gibson pointed out to him, revenues decrease. He still wants to quote be quote "fair." That's redistribution of the wealth.

HANNITY: Well, explain, if you can, why is it that it would be a bad thing? Maybe you can explain to people that think, oh, well, wait a minute, maybe the rich aren't paying enough, and if I am going to benefit, why would that be bad for the economy?

J. MCCAIN: History shows us if we raise taxes in a bad economy, you hurt the economy. And there was a president named Herbert Hoover, a Republican. They raised taxes, they practiced protectionism and they went from a serious recession into a deep depression. Now, that's a matter of history. The worst time to raise anybody's taxes on anything is when we are in an economic crisis. Finally, when people accumulate wealth, like "Joe the Plumber," then they hire other people. And then other people are able to move up the economic ladder.

HANNITY: They pay taxes, buy homes.

J. MCCAIN: That's a fundamental principle of the free enterprise system that we celebrate every day in America. Thank God, 300,000 jobs have been created by small businesses, while we lost over 700,000.

HANNITY: You feel — and you were quoted as saying you feel you're going to win, you feel the enthusiasm. You've not been happy with some of the ads that have come out against your husband. You're pretty defensive of them.

C. MCCAIN: Well, you know, I think many of the ads have misrepresented my husband, misrepresented him in a personal way, too. We have serious differences between these two candidates. And there's a very clear choice for the American people. And it's just important for us now to make sure that we get our message out and make sure that people understand what's the truth.

HANNITY: You know, when it comes to the war, for example, your son is fighting in Iraq. And Governor Palin's son is fighting in Iraq. We know your husband's record.

You know, you said — you've talked — he's lived every day of his life by this code of conduct: duty, honor, country. That is something that our opponent cannot say that he has done.

C. MCCAIN: Well, what I meant by that was my husband has lived, truly has lived his life by the code of conduct. He has always put his country first in every measure of everything he's ever done. That was not a criticism of Senator Obama by any stretch. It was just a matter of me talking about the truth and what I believe is the truth of my husband and his conduct and how he's led his life. And that's also what he's instilled in our children. Not only our sons, but our entire family. You know, they're both good men that was no way meant...

HANNITY: You've been attacked even personally. The New York Times apparently is not big fans of the McCains. But, one story that I found the most compelling about you is the story of your adoption and you didn't tell Senator McCain until you came home.

HANNITY: All right. Governor Palin — I'll ask you both this question. She had — the mini army went up to Alaska to try and dig up dirt on Governor Palin. Her family, her children have been attacked. More recently, her clothes. I think the media spent more time attacking her children and her clothes than they did investigating an issue I had been concerned about — the relationship with Bill Ayers.

What do you think of that?

C. MCCAIN: Oh, I think it's all nonsense. My gosh. We have very important issues facing the country and there's — this is the kind of stuff the media's focusing on? What about our troops? What about our economy? What about their vision for the country? That's what we should be talking about. I think the whole thing's nonsense.

(CROSSTALK)

HANNITY: I don't pay for my clothes. FOX does.

J. MCCAIN: Can I just mention one other thing? I know there's now this going around that there's differences between myself and Sarah Palin. We're very close. We are both mavericks. There are a couple of things we disagree on. In fact, you are on her side...

HANNITY: On energy independence, yeah.

J. MCCAIN: On one of them. But look, do you expect two mavericks to not — to agree on every single thing? I am so proud of her. Listen, she and I share the same principles, the same values, the same vision for America, and I couldn't be more proud of her and the job she's done.

Part 3

HANNITY: Let me ask about the negativity, in terms of the media. There's a recent study that came out: 57 percent of print and broadcast were negative against you. When it comes to Senator Obama —

C. MCCAIN: Only 57 percent? I thought it was more than that.

HANNITY: ... But, Senator Obama had more positive obviously, than was negative. ... I saw Senator Obama on "The View." I saw Michelle Obama on "The View." And then I saw you guys on "The View."

J. MCCAIN: You play the hand you're dealt. Fact is, you rely on a good sense of the American people. As we pound into this last week. Americans are starting to focus. That's why it's swinging our way, Sean...

J. MCCAIN: Elisabeth Hasselbeck, you know, who was with Sarah —

[...]

HANNITY: We're great friends.

J. MCCAIN: She's a lonely person.

HANNITY: ... I'd be negligent if I wouldn't talk about Senator Biden's comments. That Senator Obama would be tested in the first six months. That there will be, mark my words, an international crisis. Now, there's been a lot of issues involving national security. I don't know if you heard this but, French President Sarkozy, today, used the term talking about Senator Obama's plan on Iran, basically naive and utterly immature, was the phrase he used. That's meeting with rogue dictators, Iran is a tiny country not a serious threat. Putting all that together, should America be concerned about his ability to be commander-in-chief?

J. MCCAIN: I think they should be concerned and I think they'll make a decision. But the point is that he has been wrong and he was wrong about the surge. He still won't admit that he's wrong. And he's wrong about — when he said that Iran is a tiny threat. He was wrong when he said that Georgia should exercise restraint.

The point is that Senator Obama has no experience and no background to make the judgments. And I wish that every American could hear the tape of what — the way that Senator Biden said that, he said, mark my words —

HANNITY: I have played that —

J. MCCAIN: — there will be an international crisis. Sean, because he's untested and he will have to be tested. The one thing about these people that we are up against — I've been tested and they know it.

HANNITY: Does that telegraph to the world — I mean, during the debates the issues that he voted to cut off funding for the troops during the war. That he —

J. MCCAIN: After pledging that he wouldn't.

HANNITY: He accused the troops of air-raiding villages and killing civilians. He said he'd pull out — I'll end this war in 2009. He's since adjusted that. What does that mean? Does that mean we'd lose the war?

J. MCCAIN: Well, when Harry Reid announced that he agreed with him, and there is no doubt that if we had done what Senator Obama wanted to do, we would have come home — our troops would have come home, there would have been more sectarian violence, an Al Qaeda beachhead, greater Iranian influence in the region and we probably would have had to gone back with further sacrifice. But, I think the other point here is that Senator Obama just — I mean — when I hear him say some of these things, for example, about Colombia — the reason why he was against the free trade agreement with our best friend in the whole hemisphere is because that labor leaders are being killed? That's an old saw that the union leaders drug out years ago. There has been dramatic improvement in Colombia. Colombia is helping us fight — the president of Colombia rescued three Americans who were being held captive by the FARC that are working with the people he would sit down with, Hugo Chavez. ...

HANNITY: Senator Obama seems to be preparing his victory speech.... We've got all the ACORN controversy...

J. MCCAIN: ... I guarantee you one thing — we'll be up late on election night and I guarantee you that rallies like these that are going on in the next seven days, we're going to win this election.

HANNITY: Are you worried about the ACORN controversy, voter fraud?

J. MCCAIN: Sure I am. Sure I'm worried about these controversies and I'm particularly worried in Ohio.

HANNITY: The surge strategy was proven right.

C. MCCAIN: It worked. The surge worked.

HANNITY: I just disagreed with you on McCain-Feingold.

HANNITY: And McCain-Kennedy.

[...]

HANNITY: Senator, good to see you. Best of luck next week,

J. MCCAIN: Thank you.

Tim Pawlenty says McCain would support bailout for auto industry [ABC, 10/29/08, 7:20am]

DIANE SAWYER: [...] What is the one thing that Senator McCain would do within days if he's elected President, that would secure more jobs?

TIM PAWLENTY: Well he understand that in a recession you don't raise taxes. The last thing that the American people need while they're struggling to afford their heating bills and their grocery bills and their healthcare bills, is to visit upon them or the economy, or small business owners in particular, which are the only entities adding jobs now, is the tax burden. That's number one. And number two, he would be somebody very serious of getting us out of this culture and nation of debt. The nation's in $10 trillion in debt. He would freeze Federal spending except in limited categories like the military, and bring fiscal discipline back to Washington.

If you look at Barack Obama's plan, he wants to do this, he wants to raise the taxes on capital gains, he wants to raise the taxes on dividends, he wants to raise the taxes on pay roll, he wants to have a finders penalty for employers relating to healthcare, he wants to raise marginal income tax rates. Most of the small businesses in this country, which again are the people providing most of the jobs, pay their income taxes and their taxes on their individual returns, those things that I just listed would suffocate job growth in this country. There's no thinking economist, no thinking person, who says in a recession, we should raise all those taxes. And Senator McCain is also focused on bringing relief to homeowners. He's got a proposal to buy up bad mortgages or to help people with their mortgages, because that's one of the root causes for this recession that we're in.

[...]

SAWYER: Will Senator McCain go for bailout or bankruptcy?

PAWLENTY: Senator McCain has spoken of support, for targeted and specific relief for the auto industry, specifically as it relates to letting them transition to next technology cars that are low emissions or zero emissions.

SAWYER: So that means bailout?

PAWLENTY: Well, specifically, targeted to that transition, he's willing to support them in that regard.

Tax Documents Published by Huffington Post show McCain also has Ties to Rashid Khalidi
(MSNBC 10/29/08 11:05pm)

DAVID SHUSTER: "During a radio interview this morning, John McCain himself called for the Los Angeles Times to release a video tape of Barack Obama. McCain's spokesman accuses the paper of intentionally suppressing the tape that shows Obama talking about his friendship with this man, a Palestinian activist named Rashid Khalidi. The video was from 2003 when Obama was still a state Senator. In an article the Times provided a detailed description of what was on the tape but will not release it out of respect to the source. In another development, the Huffington Post has published essentially some tax documents that indicate that John McCain, while he was in charge of the International Republican Institute, actually gave grant money to Khalidi. Again this was a group in the 1990's, several grants went to the Palestinian Research Center that was cofounded by Khalidi. So arguments on both sides about ties from the candidates to this Palestinian Activist. "

FNC airs new ACORN voter suppression ad, RNC responds by attacking ACORN's "illegal activities", ACORN promises no illegal votes this election [FNC, 10/29/08, 11:39am]

ERIC SHAWN: Now they are fighting back. They are accusing the GOP and the McCain campaign of voter suppression. They say voter suppression is a real problem across the country, it takes many forms, such as voter intimidation. They also cite the no match, no vote Federal Law, where you have to show up and your i.d. exactly has to reflect what states have on their voter rolls. They say that an untold number of Americans have been purged from the voter rolls, they're predicting there could be problems six days from now, and they say that is voter suppression. They also started an advertisement that will be showing on some cable networks, including an ad buy on the Fox News Channel. 48 times, in New York, Chicago, L.A., and D.C. accusing the McCain campaign of voter suppression. Let's take a look at the ad and the point that they are trying to make.

[Ad Shown]

SHAWN: Well, election officials across the country that we've talked to have basically disputed any allegations of voter suppression. Saying if you have problems at the polls when you show up, you can for example cast a provisional ballot that will then be checked later. And the Republican National Committee today, much tougher than that. In a statement released in response to this ad they say, it's another attempt by this questionable organization, ACORN, to waste taxpayer money and cloud their own record of voter registration fraud and illegal activities. So we've got salvos from both sides.

JANE : What is ACORN saying about the phony voter registration forms?

SHAWN: They say it's hysteria and it's overblown. They are confident that there will be no illegal votes from these phony voter registration forms. We have seen one in Cleveland, Ohio where there was an illegal registration that turned into an illegal vote. But the officials there say they stopped it, they cancelled that vote. And that shows that the system works.

Tito the Builder claims Obama's principles are like Hugo Chavez's, doesn't want a handout or "government crumbs" [FNC, 10/29/08, 10:40am]

MEGYN KELLY: You are not happy with the attacks on Joe the Plumber. Tell us why.

TITO MUNOZ: The media, the way that they attacked Joe the Plumber, I think is an attack on all Americans. Because, when the media intimidates a person for asking a question, they are attacking the first amendment of the constitution. Meaning that anybody cannot ask a question anymore because the scrutiny, and it's going to be like a depression against you. And I think that's wrong, that's not what America is all about. You should have freedom of speech, the question was legal. You should not censor the question, you should not feel the consequences because it is not right. That's not right.

KELLY: Tito, I know that your story is impressive. You started as a janitor, now you on your own construction company. You have four employees, so it is a small company and you work on the main sewer lines, working on grading for foundations. Are you in the category of business that Barack Obama says would be helped most by his plan, meaning that nets under $250,000 a year.

MUNOZ: The question is not about what is my income at this moment. I look at every political assumption from the perspective of everybody. I could go back to being a janitor and this is how I look at it. I'm a janitor and what the government is going to do to me is give me a handout, give me a bunch of crumbs. They say, oh poor Tito, ok, you stay down there, you don't know anything, you're not good, you don't have a dream, just stay down

KELLY: Obviously, you're supporting John McCain. That is what you are doing at these rallies. In a nutshell, what was it that did it for you? Why are you such a fierce advocate now for McCain?

KELLY: How are you enjoying your super stardom as a result of these appearances?

KELLY: nobody better do anything to you, or they will have to answer to me.

This is a alternative if we can't do pure dodge. Which I don't think we can.

It says, I want him to have negotiating authority but not republicans. I've never supported republicans getting negotiating authority. (And if I'm elected I'm prepared to make my own case.). So what about Wyden hatch? I don't like that part but my real focus the final deal.

This feels more sustainable than full dodge.

Let's do call later today?

Boo!

My impression of the Podesta approach was more of a dodge then what you have here.

For example, if she weighs in on length of the TPA I think that will be viewed as passive opposition. Now what you propose would be more popular with dems and labor and closer to her view - so maybe okay, just want to consider that dynamic.

Think this is worth getting on the phone today to discuss.

Guys -- I talked to Brian Deese for awhile today. He thinks it is 90-95 percent that the TPA bill will drop Tuesday.

I have been thinking about a version of the Podesta approach.

What if she said something along the lines of the following?

Look, I'm focused on the final deal, and whether it will measure up. If it does, I'll support it. If it doesn't, I won't.

TPA is about Senate procedure – and in any event it's just a draft proposal making its way through a Senate committee. I want to focus on the substance: will TPP be a good deal, or not? We haven't seen the details so we can't answer that question yet.

Let me say this about TPA. I believe that President Obama should have the negotiating authority to conclude a transpacific agreement that works for the American middle class and advances American leadership. But I don't believe we should give an open-ended fast track to the next president. I hope I'm the next president, and I think I should have to justify fast track to the new Congress. And if a Republican is the next president, I certainly don't want to give fast track to them now – heck, that's why I voted against fast track for President Bush.

These are all procedural issues. The key for me is whether the final deal passes two tests: pass two tests: First, does it raise wages and create more good jobs at home than it displaces? And second, does it also strengthen our national security? Let's wait and see that final deal.

Key facts:

- 1) Domestic conventional oil production increased 72 percent since President Obama took office, and 60 percent from 2010 to 2014 (% change in EIA annual bbd data)
- 2) The impacts of climate change have grown more acute.
 - a. California is in the grips of a four year drought made 15 to 20 percent worse by climate change
 - b. More than 9 million acres have burned in wildfires this year alone - equal to MD + RI (in her book)
- 3) Tar sands crude is dirtier than most domestic conventional oil production. It is 20 percent more carbon intensive than most U.S. onshore conventional oil production. We had a tar sands crude spill in the Kalamazoo River in 2010, and EPA and NOAA will tell you it is harder and more costly to clean up than a conventional spill. And it causes more significant negative environmental impacts locally, producing toxic byproducts that conventional production doesn't.

Subject: Reporting back: Preventing gun violence Day of Action

John --

If Thursday was any indication, the NRA and the rest of the gun lobby better watch out: Last week's Day to Demand Action to prevent gun violence showed just how much support there is for common-sense legislation like universal background checks.

Here's a quick report back:

-- Grassroots volunteers held more than 130 events across the country with thousands in attendance, from Tucson to West Palm Beach to Portsmouth.

-- Supporters who couldn't make it spoke out online: The hashtag #DemandAction was the #1 trending topic nationally on Twitter, and our top Facebook post received more than 116,000 likes and 23,000 shares on Thursday alone.

-- Our volunteer-led events received local and national media coverage on news outlets across the country, including CNN, Fox News, and hundreds of local ABC, NBC, and CBS affiliates.

Members of Congress were back in their home districts last week, and I guarantee they heard our voices.

Whether they do the right thing and pass legislation 92 percent of Americans support -- or cave to the powerful gun lobby -- depends on what we do next.

Add your name to the hundreds of thousands of Americans and OFA supporters demanding action to prevent gun violence:

<http://my.barackobama.com/Fight-to-Reduce-Gun-Violence>

We started a drumbeat last Thursday, and as long as we don't stop now, our representatives in Congress will have no choice but to act.

Thanks for being part of this fight.

First, he created a factory in Mexicali and denied that those jobs could have gone to Wichita workers.

Then, he said creating jobs in Kansas was "fundamentally not his job" in Congress before trying to backpedal on that statement - but then we reminded him he had said it over and over again.

And now, less than seven days after news of more than 1,000 new layoffs in Wichita, he's bringing his political party boss/outsourcing soul mate to Wichita to deliver more of his trademark nasty partisan rhetoric that Kansans don't need.

Attachments: Elisa Montoya Resume1.docx

John - You are making all Democrats proud of your contribution to the new administration, especially me. Forgive me for this mundane and selfish request, given your responsibilities, but I'd like for someone to take a look at Elisa Montoya's resume. She took a leave from my firm to serve as Obama's National Latino Outreach Director in the final 90 days of campaign. She would make a great deputy to someone. She is smart, hardworking and discreet. As you can see from her resume, she has an impressive background. You may remember her mom, Liz Montoya, who worked in Presidential Personnel. Federico Pena, Henry Cisneros, Ken Salazar, Xavier Becerra, Patti Solis and her immediated superior in Obama campaign, Patrick Gaspard. would vouch for her. She is having to decide whether to come back to firm or wait for opportunity. Her preference, given that she has already severed her role at firm, would be to continue on. Thanks for any help. Best, Jose

Subject: 2015 Review: Financial Reg. Reform

Mike & Co. --

After the GOP captured the Senate in the midterm elections, the main question in the financial regulatory world as 2015 began was whether Congress would rollback key parts of Dodd-Frank Act (DFA) as the GOP-controlled House had been voting to do over the previous four years.

How did the two sides fare? What issues were at play? What have we learned and what can be expected in 2016?

These questions are answered below as the Shelby bill is considered both as standalone legislation and as a rider on the omnibus appropriations bills and other major financial regulatory legislation of 2015 is reviewed.

Best,

Dana

In the tug-of-war between the financial industry and supporters of Dodd-Frank, the gains and losses were marginal on both sides in 2015. Once again, the struggle resulted in another stand off between the industry's efforts to ease the regulatory burden of DFA and advocates' bid to expand its protections for workers, investors and increase resources for regulators. Republicans blame leading Democrats in Congress and in the administration; financial reformers who spent all year trying to block regulatory rollbacks are crediting them.

The financial industry urged Congress to soften several DFA regulations and sought to do this first through Senate Banking Chair Richard Shelby's bill entitled The Financial Regulatory Improvement Act of 2015. The bill, more than 200 pages and consisting of eight wide titles, addresses wide-ranging areas of reform from changes to a key DFA threshold for enhanced prudential standards to the CFPB's qualified mortgage rule.

Sen. Sherrod Brown, the top Democrat on Senate Banking, said Shelby's bill went too far: "Democrats are ready, willing, and able to work with Republicans to get community banks and credit unions the regulatory relief they need right now... Rather than focusing on issues that enjoy broad bipartisan support, this draft bill is a sprawling industry wish list of Dodd-Frank rollbacks. This sweeping proposal holds Main Street financial institutions hostage to a partisan effort to dismantle Dodd-Frank's consumer protections and sensible rules for the large banks and nonbanks that played central roles in the financial crisis."

The main provisions of the Shelby bill:

- Community Bank Reg. Relief --

Comprising 25 different measures loosening regulations on the country's smallest banks: relief from privacy disclosure requirements; permission for privately insured credit unions to become members of the Federal Home Loan Bank system; an exemption for banks under $10 billion in assets from the Volcker Rule; and a requirement that the National Credit Union Administration hold public hearings and receive comment on its budget.

The opening title also included several provisions criticized by Democrats, such as a change to the CFPB's QM rule allowing all loans held in portfolio to be eligible for the rule's safe harbor provisions -- a controversial measure altering how certain "points and fees" are calculated under the QM rule, it removes language regarding affiliated title companies that spurred much of the earlier criticism. It further makes changes banning certain types of loans, such as "no-doc" loans that helped spur the financial crisis.

- SIFI Threshold -- The bill would have multiplied the DFA threshold mandating tougher capital and oversight on banks by ten times to over $500 billion in consolidated assets, though regulators would have the discretion to examine any banks over $50 billion to be considered systemic. The Fed Board could make a recommendation to the FSOC to consider a particular bank holding company, though the FSOC would have the ability to launch its own evaluation as well. The FSOC would be able to vote to change the list of criteria over time, and the $500 billion threshold would also be indexed for GDP growth. Shelby was willing to narrow the $50-$500 billion window for deregulation he had first proposed. Democratic aides involved in the discussions said Shelby was willing to go as low as $250 billion. Democrats weren't willing to go above $200 billion.
- FSOC Process for Non-Banks -- This title would have codified changes to the FSOC process for designating nonbanks as systemically important, to provide additional transparency to the process. Some in Congress have criticized FSOC's designation process as being too opaque. The FSOC would be required to give detailed explanations for why regulators are considering a designation; provide opportunities for companies to meet with council representatives; analyze a company's remedial plan for removing a SIFI designation and allow for revisions; and offer an explanation if the council moves forward with a formal designation. Regulators would also be required to hold a hearing for designated companies at least once every five years and would have to vote to renew the decision to designate.
- Fed Governance Reforms -- The bill would have made several changes to the Federal Reserve System. It would require the head of the New York Fed to be nominated by the White House and confirmed by the Senate. It would also direct the formation of an independent commission to evaluate the structure of the Fed system, including looking at the number and structure of the Fed's 12 districts. The Fed would be required to publish a study every two years on its regulation and oversight of non-banks, a provision that would sunset after 10 years. The GAO would be required to publish a study looking at the agency's regulation of systemically important institutions, with an eye toward issues around regulatory capture.
- Swaps/Emerging Growth Firms -- This title addressed several measures related to SEC registration and regulation. Most notably, it would remove indemnification requirements on swap data so that it can be shared with foreign regulators more easily and would establish a "grace period" for emerging growth companies working toward an initial public offering.
- Mortgage Finance System -- The bill included several provisions related to the mortgage finance system, including Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac. It would prohibit Congress from using guarantee fees to offset unrelated government spending and would ban the sale of Treasury-owned preferred stock in the government-sponsored enterprises without the approval of Congress. It would also direct the FHFA to provide Congress with updates on the establishment of a common securitization platform and would transition the platform to a non-profit available to approved issuers beyond Fannie and Freddie. Finally, it would mandate that the GSEs' risk-sharing levels be at least 150 percent of the previous year's level, with at least half of the total as front-end risk sharing.

With such a wide variety of significant proposals, the Shelby bill was an overloaded canoe. Senate Banking reported it out favorably in May, but only on a 12-10 party-line vote, not sufficient to be certain to clear the 60-vote filibuster hurdle to passage in the Senate.

Over the months that followed, members and staff met frequently to discuss which elements of the bill had bipartisan support. Shelby's participation in these meetings was occasional at best and the discussions never really became negotiations.

Committee Republicans Crapo, Moran and Corker did not negotiate in place of Shelby, but they tried to find common ground with a few receptive Democrats on the Banking Committee, including Sens. Warner, Donnelly, Heitkamp, and Tester.

By the end of September, the group came up with a rough framework that covered areas where the Democrats appeared willing to move closer to some of Shelby's proposals. The Democrats were able to find some common ground with Republicans on key areas including easing regulations for community banks, creating a new carve-out for regional banks in Dodd-Frank and making changes to the way the FSOC polices big financial firms outside the banking sector.

The ideas were presented separately to Shelby and Senate Banking Committee ranking member Sherrod Brown. Brown was not negotiating alongside the moderate Senate Democrats but his staff was kept in the loop.

In early November, Brown arranged a meeting between all the banking committee Democrats so the four who had been working with Republicans could update the rest on the discussions. One aide briefed on the meeting said reaction was mixed. Some members showed interest and others showed strong opposition.

Then on November 10, Sen. Warren gave a speech on the Senate floor warning her colleagues against going down the same road that led to a controversial Dodd-Frank rollback to weaken restrictions on derivatives trading from being tucked into last year's spending bill. She called out Democrats who "want to get something done around here for a change... If there's anyone in this chamber, Republican or Democrat, who thinks they can slip goodies for Wall Street into these bills without a fight, they are very wrong," she said, referring to must-pass legislation including the upcoming appropriations bill. In addition to the pushback from Warren and other outside groups, the compromise effort faced public and private opposition from Treasury.

Warren and reform advocates were mindful that they lost a round last December, when JPMorgan Chase and Citigroup lobbyists secured a change to Dodd-Frank rules on complex financial instruments known as swaps. "The law isn't perfect, and some of us think we need more accountability to make sure big financial institutions don't threaten the economy again, but House Republicans are pushing in the opposite direction."

Meanwhile, back in July, Shelby, a senior member of the Appropriations Committee, had his bill attached as a rider on the Financial Services FY 2016 appropriations bill. But he got almost nothing in the final spending agreement. After months of laying the groundwork, banks and their allies in Congress missed their big shot at moving a wide-ranging legislative agenda in a must-pass spending bill this year before the 2016 election cycle heats up.

Among the major financial provisions that didn't make it into the spending package:

- Fiduciary Duty -- Per DFA, the Labor Department finally put forth a fiduciary rule in April, the first update of the government's retirement investment advice regulations in four decades. The rule, which would take effect next year, requires brokers and financial advisers to act in the "best interest" of retirement savers—a higher standard than current regulations, which only require advice be "suitable."

The new rule aims to eliminate the potential conflict of interests between people who offer investment advice and companies that sell financial products at a time when individuals are made responsible for building their own nest eggs through programs like IRAs and 401(k)s that have largely replaced traditional pension funds that guaranteed life-long benefits. The financial industry has said it would raise the compliance costs and drive many financial advisers out of business while making investment advice unaffordable for middle-class savers.

- Community Bank Lending Rules -- A number of regulatory changes sought by small, locally focused community lenders, such as an exemption from certain mortgage underwriting rules for mortgages held in a bank's portfolio.

- CFPB Governance -- Creating a board, rather than a single director, to govern the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, and subjecting the agency's budget to annual appropriations.

- Fed Dividend -- In a surprise, the banking community lost a sizable source of revenue -- the annual Fed dividend paid to member banks, totaling $25 billion. The highway bill passed earlier this month took some of the money that banks receive in dividends from the Fed to help pay for fixing the U.S.'s deteriorating roads. Wall Street was furious over the precedent of having financial firms pay for infrastructure projects and lobbied to get a provision in the spending bill that would have given banks more flexibility to sell their shares in the Fed's regional banks. Lawmakers rejected the provision.

Another piece of legislation that made the cut: a provision that prohibits Treasury from selling the government's stake in mortgage-finance giants Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac until 2018 without future legislation. The U.S. government bailed out Fannie and Freddie in 2008, and in return received warrants to acquire nearly 80% of the companies' stock along with a new class of preferred shares.

Congress has tried unsuccessfully to pass legislation that would replace Fannie and Freddie with a new system, leading some of the companies' proponents to push the Obama administration to take action on its own and sell the shares.

Financial industry lobbyists were all but stymied in their efforts to slip measures helping banks, insurers and private-equity firms into the $1.1 trillion omnibus bill fund. The spending bill did include other minor items, low-hanging fruit for the financial industry.

The highway bill passed earlier this month took some of the money that banks receive in dividends from the Federal Reserve to help pay for fixing the U.S.'s deteriorating roads. Wall Street was furious over the precedent of having financial firms pay for infrastructure projects and lobbied to get a provision in the spending bill that would have given banks more flexibility to sell their shares in the Fed's regional banks but the provision was rejected.

Some consolation prizes for industry survived. An omnibus rider banning the SEC from requiring corporations to publicly disclose their political and lobbying expenditures managed to survive. And negotiators included cybersecurity legislation designed to make it easier for the financial firms and others in the private sector to share threat information with the government. Industry also secured a provision that prohibits the Treasury Department from selling the government's stake in mortgage-finance giants Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac until 2018 without future legislation. The government bailed out Fannie and Freddie in 2008, and in return received warrants to acquire nearly 80 percent of the companies' stock along with a new class of preferred shares.

Five years after a crisis that shook the foundations of finance, Warren has public opinion on her side. A Washington Post/ABC News published October finding that 72 percent of Democrats, 58 percent of Republicans, and 68 percent of independents want the next president to pursue tougher regulations on banks.

Public distrust has forced Wall Street — and financial services writ large — to make oblique arguments that don't tackle head-on the unpopularity of the industry across the entire electorate. Republicans, trying to avoid an explicit alliance with Wall Street, regard their legislation as "reforms of the reforms" that Dodd-Frank made. If 2015 is any guide, and particularly given the politics of a presidential election next year, the prospects for significant financial regulatory legislation in 2016 is remote.

Nikki,

do you think we are going to continue to see folks move from 2015 conference asks to 2016 conference asks as part of their endorsement process or are IAFF and NEA outliers?

Yep, the NEA alternatives I outlined below are what the NEA would like us to commit to (all of them) in place of our absence at the RA. Good evening everyone Attached is tonight's updated spreadsheet. Here are a few points to draw your attention to:

1. July 1st, we have scheduled our labor policy discussions in Washington DC with our policy team. Notice has gone out.
2. Need to discuss/confirm NEA requests post-RA decision. Also, NEA has reached out twice frustrated by HRC attending NALEO and not the RA (given our conference position). It would be helpful to have a response to NALEO question and feedback back on their other requests.
 - RA Video
 - Teletown Hall with members and HRC (July)
 - Walk a Day event (August-September)
 - 2016 RA attendance

From our email last night, I have connected with Kari in NH regarding the RA and any Sanders activity. She is reaching out to Scott McGilvray to help. I'm meeting with Troy and ISEA next week in Iowa.

3. Alliance for Retired Americans Convention has requested a Senator surrogate to their conference. HRC is unable to attend. A video is not a option. Are we interested in asking a friendly Senator to surrogate? Sanders and Pelosi are confirmed to attend.

4. The UAW has started to engage in a endorsement process and invited HRC to their Executive Board meeting in Detroit August 11-13th. UAW has big 3 bargaining this year, FYI.

5. AFT teletown hall with members regarding 2016 endorsement last night went "very well".

6. Current confirmed attendees to John's home: Trumka, Saunders, J. David Cox (AFGE), Perrone (UFCW), McGarvey (BCTD).

Trade Update:

TPA passed House and the labor campaign has moved to the 14 Democratic Senators that voted for TPA/TAA. Almost all of the 14 said that they would only vote for TPA with TAA. This is the leverage point labor is trying to work. The 14 Democratic Senators met with the White House today and reports back were not positive for the WH. A cloture vote could happen in the Senate as early as tonight with a final TPA vote potentially happening on Tuesday next week. In the House CBC Chairman Butterfield along with four other CBC members signed a letter to the Senate saying that if they attach TAA to African Growth Opportunity Act they can't count on their votes for it in the House.

Subject: Latest House and Senate Analysis

Friends,

I have posted a couple of pieces about Senate and House races on Huffington Post and Open Left over the last few days, but I'm guessing that not all of you would have had the chance to read them, but still might appreciate getting them to give some perspective on this wild and wacky election. Here they are in full. Please let me know if you have questions about anything in them, or need any other info on these races.

Keep your hopes up.

House Races (+)

by: Mike Lux

Thu Oct 14, 2010 at 10:30

My previous rankings in a different format can be found here

Most of the election cycles I have worked in, it was relatively easy to write a comprehensive memo to the people and groups I work with on House races. The DCCC tended to only be targeting maybe 20-25 races, and even if you grant that their targeting criterion could get a little too narrow, it was still true that there were generally not any more than 35-40 competitive races even with a more expansive definition. This year, even by the more narrow definition, there are at least 80 races that are highly competitive, and if you have a more expansive definition of competitive, there are well over 100 races in play.

Don't worry, I'm not going to write about each one. Instead, I'm going to highlight a few that I think are symbolically and substantively especially important for the progressive community.

The single most important thing in this year's potential Republican wave is to work to preserve the best progressives in Congress that are in trouble. Here are my top priorities in this category.

Progressive incumbents

1. AZ-08, Raul Grijalva. Raul is in a district that is normally safe, but with immigration politics at fever pitch in Arizona, and with Raul having the guts to endorse the national boycott, there is a reason to worry about our chair of the Congressional Progressive Caucus. It would be terrible symbolically and substantively to lose Raul's voice and leadership in Congress.

2. OH-15, Mary Jo Kilroy. Kilroy has stood tall on all the biggest issues in spite of her district being very far from safe. She is in a very tight race with corporate special interests pouring a ton of money in.

3. OH-13, Betty Sutton. Another tough midwestern populist woman who has been there on all the big issues, and she is running against a self-funding extremist right-winger.

4. IL-17, Phil Hare. Phil Hare is not very well known outside of his district, but he is one of my very favorite members of Congress. An old labor guy who worked for the former congressman in this working-class district in the Illinois side of the Quad Cities, progressive champion Lane Evans, Phil has been a hardcore progressive on every kind of issue in spite of the swing nature of his district, and this year is getting his biggest challenge yet.

5. VA-05, Tom Perriello. Tom is still fighting for his life in this very tough working-class district, but has been successful at raising a lot of money. He is facing massive negative spending from outside groups.

6. FL-08, Alan Grayson. Same dynamic with Perriello, except Alan has raised even more than Tom. But he is the top House target for the Chamber and Rove, so he still needs all the money he can get.

7. WI-08, Steven Kagen. Another very strong progressive from a tough working-class district, the Green Bay, Wisconsin area. Steve is a physician who made a big difference on the health care debate.

8. NH-01, Carol Shea-Porter. A progressive who first won her seat by beating the establishment Democrat in the primary, then winning the general election without a dime from the DCCC. Carol is in a very tough race this year.

9. NY-19, John Hall. A former musician, Hall is in a tough swing district facing a very well funded challenger. He needs the dough.

When you have a tide going against you, I think it is doubly important to be aggressive in trying to pick up seats in vulnerable Republican districts. If all you are doing is playing defense, the other side can spread their turf and make you defend in places you should not have to defend.

Fortunately, we have several good takeover possibilities, among them the Cao seat in New Orleans, where the Democratic candidate has a 10 point lead; the Delaware seat left open by Mike Castle's ill-fated run for the Senate, and where the Republicans nominated a less famous (so far, he has not had to deny he is a witch) but equally right-wing candidate to run alongside Christine O'Donnell; and the Illinois seat left open by Mark Kirk's run for the Senate, where the guy who almost beat Kirk in 2008, Dan Seals, is running a strong race. For my money, the highest priority potential takeover seats are the following:

Potential takeovers

1. FL-25, Joe Garcia. With Marco Rubio likely to be Florida's next Senator, it sure would be nice to have a strong progressive Cuban-American win a long held Republican seat in the Cuban section of Miami. Joe is a great candidate, and this is a big race symbolically for our side.

2. CA-45, Steve Pougnet. Steve is Mayor of Palm Springs, and would be the first openly gay dad and first legally married gay man in Congress. This is a district carried by Obama, and Steve is running a strong campaign against Sonny Bono's widow.

3. CA-03, Ami Bera. Bera would be the first Indian-American in Congress, and has raised a lot of money against a congressman mostly famous for being the first one to figure out and exploit a loophole in the 2007 Congressional Ethics Bill and get himself an all-expense paid trip to Hawaii by a trade association.

4. PA-15, John Callahan. A new poll out shows this a dead heat. Callahan is Mayor of Bethlehem and while I don't agree with him on everything, I think he is a solid guy. Incumbent Charlie Dent meanwhile is truly awful and a Pat Toomey clone. I think Callahan's ideas about what would work to rebuild our manufacturing sector in America, an issue I care about a lot, are especially important.

5. CA-44, Bill Hedrick. Hedrick is hanging in there against Ken Calvert, one of the most pro-big business members of Congress there is and a big right-winger. Bill came close to beating him last time, and this could be a district we can steal.

6. PA-06, Manan Trivedi. Trivedi is endorsed by a lot of different progressive groups and is running a better race against Jim Gerlach than previous challengers have run. This is one of the most marginal districts in the country, although Pennsylvania is a tough place to win in this cycle.

7. MO-08, Tom Sowers. Another very tough race against an entrenched incumbent, but to many, keeping progressives in Congress is running a hell of a race.

8. OH-08, Justin Coussoule. I know, I know, no one thinks Boehner can be beaten, but Justin is a good candidate and Boehner is paying no attention whatsoever. Besides, I love the idea of giving Boehner trouble back home.

Open seat districts held by Democrats

There are so many races that are so close and I've already mentioned more than I had intended to, so I am going to keep this list short.

1. NH-02, Ann Kuster. Ann is a strong progressive running for Paul Hodes open seat. She beat the establishment Democrat in the primary, and now is facing a hell of a tough general election fight.

2. WI-07, Julia Lassa. This is Dave Obey's seat, and it would be such a shame to lose it to a right-winger. Julie is the same kind of economic populist Obey was, but is better than him on choice issues. She is trailing in her race but is still in the hunt if she can raise some money.

3. PA-07, Bryan Lentz. This is Sestak's open seat, and it is one of the most competitive swing districts in the country. Lentz seems to be a solid progressive.

4. AR-02, Joyce Elliot. This is Vic Snyder's open seat, where Joyce Elliott, the African-American State Senator endorsed by Blue America beat the Conservadem House Speaker in the primary. She also has a lot of strong union support. This is also a district Vic Snyder has won nearly unopposed for years.

Sorry if I didn't name your favorite race: I freely admit that I probably missed some I should have mentioned. This is a wild year, and small last minute developments, trends, and ad buys all matter. Please help out the candidates that move you the most.

Subject: An Announcement

About VoteVets.org

Dear Friends,

We are writing to let you know that tomorrow Jon will be announcing that he is taking a one-year leave of absence from VoteVets.org, because he is being deployed to Iraq in support of Operation New Dawn. We expect him back at VoteVets.org in January 2012.

I know your first question is how does this affect the future of VoteVets.org? The answer is, "It doesn't."

The group won't miss a beat – continuing its work on the same issues of importance to veterans – from veterans health care, to energy independence – with interim Chairman, and Iraq War Veteran, Ashwin Madia, who has been the group's Vice Chairman since 2009. The rest of the VoteVets.org infrastructure will remain the same as Les will continue to manage the day to day operations.

VoteVets.org will continue to work with – and is excited to expand our relationships – all of our allies: Labor, Environmental groups, LGBT organizations, women's groups, and more, to continue to build long standing progressive infrastructure.

What we have been able to build, with your help, is a solid organization from top to bottom. With over 100,000 supporters, alliances forged from coast to coast, and a spectacular cadre of staff and advisors, we have no doubt that with your continued support VoteVets.org won't just survive while Jon is in Iraq – it will thrive.

We want to say a word about Ashwin, who will be assuming Chairman duties. Ashwin is as an energetic, determined, principled, and skilled person as there is. Before VoteVets.org was even around, Ashwin was fighting for what was right. A lawyer by trade, in the Marines, Ashwin was one of the first military attorneys to successfully defend a gay servicemember from discharge. As someone who ran for Congress, Ashwin also has a keen and personal understanding of how politics works. As Vice Chairman of VoteVets.org, he knows how we operate, and will continue operations seamlessly. We have no doubt that you'll be impressed with Ashwin as we are, as you get to know him.

In closing, it is somewhat fitting that we are writing to tell you this on the eve of Veterans' Day. In many ways, a veteran's service never ends. Jon was in Iraq to start the war, and then came home to form a group that would ask tough questions about the war's execution. That was four years ago. And, now, he will go back to Iraq, because his country called, and because he so strongly believes in his duty to be there to lead the soldiers in his unit. When he gets back, he will return to serving his country, and our fellow veterans, by rejoining VoteVets.org.

We will be hosting a small reception for Jon in mid December in Washington, DC to send him off. And we will forward details to each of you in hopes that you can make it.

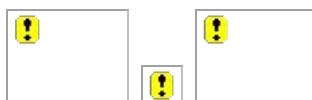

We want to thank you from the bottom of our hearts for all you've done to help veterans, and what you will continue to do to keep VoteVets.org the largest and most successful progressive veterans organization in the country.

If you would like to reach Jon to send him some good thoughts you can do so at jon@votevets.org. Les can still be reached at les@votevets.org as well.

Sincerely,

Jon Soltz and Les Macdonald

Subject: BREAKING: Seven Senate seats up for grabs

LCV VICTORY FUND

Donate to LCV Victory Fund: Seven battleground Senate races are virtually tied! Give today before the September 30th FEC deadline and have a major impact on these races in the final weeks before Election Day.

John --

The Massachusetts Senate race between Elizabeth Warren and Scott Brown is now a dead heat. In Connecticut, World Wrestling Entertainment owner and climate denier Linda McMahon has closed the gap with Rep. Chris Murphy.

With the Montana, Virginia, Nevada, Arizona, and Ohio Senate races also incredibly close, our goal of maintaining a firewall of at least 41 Senators willing to filibuster against the worst anti-environment attacks could be in jeopardy.

Every single one of these races is winnable - but here's the bottom line: undecided voters are deciding now. And with early voting in Montana and Ohio just a few weeks away, every day we wait is a missed opportunity.

The LCV Victory Fund urgently needs to raise $120,000 for canvassing and get-out-the-vote efforts by the FEC deadline of September 30th. We need to be in a strong position for the final October push. I promise you, if you give today, your gift will have an impact on these races.

Don't miss a moment - make a gift to LCV Victory Fund today >>

This past Tuesday, the New York Times declared,

"With less than two months until Election Day, the Senate landscape is both broader and more fluid than it has been in years, with control of the upper chamber now anyone's guess."

LCV Victory Fund is focusing on the tight races where we have the best chance of making a real impact. In the last weeks of the election, here are the Senate races where we're concentrating our efforts:

Massachusetts: A recent poll shows Scott Brown up by just one point against Elizabeth Warren. To help her win on Election Day, we're conducting one of the largest canvass operations in LCV's history to identify and persuade pro-environment voters to turn out. It's working - Warren is picking up momentum and with your help, we can help her take the lead.

Virginia: Virginia is one of the top targets for Karl Rove's and the Koch brothers' Super PACs - and they're blanketing the state with nasty and misleading advertising. In response, we're running one of our largest mail operations to help put former Virginia governor Tim Kaine ahead of former Virginia Senator - and 3-time Dirty Dozen member - George Allen.

Montana: Clean energy champion Jon Tester won his 2006 race by just 3,562 votes and we're expecting this race to be just as close. We've been running a program to identify and target pro-environment voters who want to vote by mail. With only 500,000 individuals expected to vote in November, if we can just get a portion of them to commit to vote by mail, we may have the margin of victory needed to win.

We're also working around the clock in Connecticut, Nevada, Arizona, and Ohio, where pro-environment candidates are running neck-and-neck against candidates strongly backed by corporate special interests.

Many pro-environment candidates are getting pummeled by negative attack ads from groups funded by Karl Rove and the Koch brothers. But despite the millions of dollars pouring into these battleground states, corporate special interest groups haven't been able to significantly move the needle. The public is still with us and that's why we need your support today.

Believe me, I've seen it before, just a few votes could decide these races. Will you chip in \$5 to help LCV Victory Fund win for the environment?

Thank you for your generosity. Our nation - and the planet - is counting on it.

Best -

Donate before the September 30th FEC deadline!

Seven critical environmental Senate races are up for grabs - Connecticut, Montana, Virginia, Arizona, Nevada, Ohio, and Massachusetts.

Thanks. I can raise 2 with them tomorrow and if you all want to join tomorrow, that would be great too. Also note - Governor Padilla is scheduled to come to CGI next week and to participate in the "island energy issues" discussion. So might be a second opportunity to raise #2 with him in a room full of folks who would give moral support.

I know this probably is crazy talk - but do you think we should invite PRPPA head to the cgi island energy discussion? Would put them in a tight spot to be in that room and face all those folks and not agree to "do" something.

Subject: RE: Visit to Puerto Rico, Next Steps

Two points I would push them on:

1) If all they are going to do is prepare a report, I am not sure that gets us anything. PRPPA is fighting hard against any change at the moment and a report doesn't move the ball forward. They need to use the report as a tool to generate a call for action on some concrete steps, like a law requiring PRPPA to meet specific targets with a timeline for the conversion to renewables. They talk about some pretty specific goals but process of making them happen is critical and its not clear from the memo how that will occur. The key challenge they face is not figuring out what they need to do but figuring out how to get it done.

2) The Culebra idea is interesting. In the past the previous Governor has called for making Vieques energy independent. Working on these two islands is something the foundation might want to explore as a joint project with the Government and PRPPA. Because of WJC's history with Vieques, it also gives us a hook. This would require a meeting between someone with the Foundation, PRPPA and the Governor. Don't know if they would agree but would be big if they did and would show the rest of PR that it can be done. PRPPA may have a lobbyist in DC and it might be easier to make the deal up here than down there where everything is so polarized.

Subject: Proposed Paper Topic

Dear Professors,

Although I've had some difficulty zeroing in on a topic, I think I'd like to write about a topic Judge Leon touched on in last week's class: the Brendan Sullivan effect.

Specifically, I'd describe his role in the Iran Contra hearings, the ways in which investigators later responded to cabin the role of witnesses' attorneys, and consider whether an attorney could ever again have even close to that effect on an investigation. (I suspect not, given that we're now 30 years on.) My concern is that there won't be enough here for 20 pages, but perhaps I'm wrong about that.

My interest in the topic is twofold--first, because I'll be going into private practice, if I'm going to have any contact with an investigation, it's likely to be in the role of representing a witness; second, because I'll be at Williams & Connolly, I have a personal interest in the story and in the firm's institutional history. (As a disclaimer, though, I have no interest in writing a hagiography.)

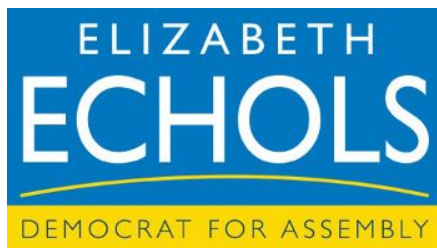

See you in class,
Brian

Subject: New Endorsements Build Momentum After Primary Victory

John --

I am happy to announce that the Northern California Carpenters Regional Council and Carpenters Local 152 have endorsed my campaign for State Assembly. I am proud to be endorsed by two organizations who have fought so hard for working families.

I have included the press release below.

Sincerely,

Elizabeth

For Immediate Release: June 17, 2014

Contact: Lisa Murphy (916) 443-7817

The Northern California Carpenters Regional Council and Carpenters Local 152 endorse Elizabeth Echols for State Assembly

Echols is running for Assembly District 15

June 17, 2014 - Building on the momentum from her decisive first place finish in the June primary, the Elizabeth Echols for State Assembly campaign announced today the endorsement of the Northern California Carpenters Regional Council, along with Carpenters Local 152 which covers Contra Costa County.

The Northern California Carpenters Regional Council endorsed Echols because of her strong advocacy on behalf of working families. Echols is running for Assembly District 15, which is currently represented by Nancy Skinner. Skinner, who will be termed out at the end of the year, has endorsed Echols's candidacy.

"I am honored to receive the endorsement of the Northern California Carpenters Regional Council and Carpenters Local 152," said Echols. "The support of working men and women was critical to my campaign's success in the June primary. I look forward to fighting for working families in Sacramento."

10/18/2016

The endorsement builds on a broad coalition of labor support including the California Federation of Teachers, the California School Employees Association, the California Faculty Association, SEIU-CA, AFSCME California People, the California Labor Federation, the California State Council of Laborers, Teamsters Joint Council 7, the Alameda Labor Council, the Contra Costa Labor Council, and many local affiliates.

Echols also is endorsed by incumbent Assemblymember Nancy Skinner, State Senator Loni Hancock (who previously held the seat), and elected officials across the district including Alameda County Supervisors Richard Valle and Nate Miley, Berkeley Mayor Tom Bates, El Cerrito Mayor Janet Abelson, Hercules Mayor Myrna de Vera, Piedmont Mayor Margaret Fujioka, and former Richmond Mayor Rosemary Corbin.

About Elizabeth Echols

Elizabeth Echols grew up in Berkeley where she attended local public schools including what is now Rosa Parks Elementary School. She attended Yale University on scholarships and put herself through Stanford Law School. Her public service career has taken her across the nation, all the way to the White House. She served both President Clinton and President Obama. Sorry this took me so long to put together. This week has been nuts. Attached is a rough draft. Let me know what you think. One issue I didn't resolve is how much we'd want her to still participate in scheduling if she does the HQ job. I think it's helpful for her to participate in calls and meetings because she's the institutional memory--and that's always invaluable. At the same time, I don't want people confused about who is in charge (i.e. the scheduler needs to be in command of that process). I think good management can solve for that, but was curious what you think. Thanks for your help on this.

Mad Men Star Pitches New Client

John Slattery Joins LCV's Door-To-Door Ad Campaign for Obama in Battleground Virginia

WASHINGTON- Today the League of Conservation Voters, which works to turn environmental values into national priorities, announced a special addition to its Virginia canvass in support of Barack Obama for President. On October 11th, John Slattery, star of the Emmy Award winning series Mad Men, will go door-to-door with LCV volunteers to encourage Virginians to vote for Senator Obama.

"John Slattery connects with mass audiences through his television and film work and now he will help us connect with the tens of thousands of households on behalf of Barack Obama," said LCV President Gene Karpinski. "We are thrilled that the man who brings Roger Sterling to life will bring even more excitement to LCV's effort to win Virginia and the White House for Barack Obama. Mad Men is one of the most critically acclaimed and entertaining dramas on television, and Mr. Slattery will help bring attention to the clean energy solutions our country so desperately needs."

John Slattery plays an advertising executive in 1960's Manhattan in the stylized and provocative AMC hit. A veteran actor, Slattery has recently appeared on screen in the films Flags of our Fathers, Charlie Wilson's War, and Traffic. He has also appeared in Sex and the City, Will and Grace, and Desperate Housewives.

"Politicians have been talking about energy independence almost since the days of Mad Men," Karpinski said. "But the time has come to make clean, renewable, American energy a reality. LCV supports Barack Obama because he has the most comprehensive energy plan ever offered by a nominee for president."

LCV volunteers have been going door-to-door in Northern Virginia for the last several weeks to encourage swing voters to support Obama for President, and they will continue to do so every weekend between now and election day. The 2008 presidential race may be decided by just a handful of voters in Virginia and knocking on doors and engaging voters can make the difference between John McCain and Barack Obama, between a continuation of the Bush energy policies that led to today's energy crisis and a new energy future with millions of new jobs, greater national security, and a comprehensive plan to deal with global warming.

Anyone interested in meeting Mr. Slattery and talking to their neighbors about Senator Obama is encouraged to join LCV on Saturday, October 11 at 10:00am in Northern Virginia. For location details and to sign up, contact Spencer Ellsworth at 202.785.8683 or sign up online at www.lcv.org.

Subject: Get the Shell Out

LEAGUE OF CONSERVATION VOTERS

Sign our petition to get Shell Oil out of America's Arctic Ocean: Tell Interior Secretary Salazar to put a stop to Arctic drilling now!

John,

Shell Oil's irresponsible attempts to drill for oil in America's Arctic Ocean have gone from bad to worse in the past year. Now with the recent grounding of Shell's drilling rig off the coast of Alaska, we have an opportunity to get the U.S. Department of Interior to suspend Shell's project and all oil and gas drilling in America's Arctic.

Will you add your name to our petition to get Shell out of the Arctic?

On New Year's Eve, Shell's huge Kulluk oil drilling rig — with 150,000 gallons of fuel on board — broke loose from a tow vessel during a major storm and ran aground on some rocks along Alaska's coast.

The grounding of its drilling rig is just the latest in a series of troubling incidents in the past year that have marked Shell's debacle of an Arctic drilling program. They include its oil spill containment system failing catastrophically in a test overseen by government officials, an ongoing criminal investigation of safety and pollution control problems on one of Shell's drill ships, and an attempt by Shell to allow its rigs to pollute the air beyond the limits that the company had already agreed to meet.

And do you know why Shell was moving its drilling rig on New Year's Eve in the middle of a massive ocean storm? It's because they were attempting to avoid paying taxes they would have owed had they remained in an Alaska port on January 1! How can we possibly trust a company to operate in a pristine environment like the Arctic if it runs such enormous risks to its crew, the environment, and wildlife in order to save what amounts to a drop in the bucket of their profits?

We cannot let them get away with this recklessness.

Tell the U.S. Department of Interior: Suspend Shell's drilling in America's Arctic Ocean now!

This year, Shell has lost control of multiple rigs in Alaska waters. They haven't been able to persuade the Coast Guard to certify that their equipment could effectively respond to an oil spill if another disaster struck like in the Gulf of Mexico. And even other oil companies have backed out of any Arctic drilling efforts because of the major potential for disaster.

Earlier this week the Obama Administration announced that they will do a major review of Shell's Arctic operations and the Coast Guard began an investigation into the Kulluk accident.

This is our opportunity to convince our government to put a stop to Arctic drilling. If they hear from enough of us, at a time when the risks of this terrible project have just been exposed, the Department of Interior can suspend all oil and gas drilling in America's Arctic. But they need to hear from you today.

Sign our petition to Interior Secretary Salazar here >>

The Arctic is home to indigenous communities whose culture, history, and livelihoods are tied to these lands and waters. It is also the habitat of many forms of iconic wildlife including polar bears, arctic foxes, and 17 different types of whales, dolphins, and porpoises. Many Arctic species are already threatened because of the effects of man-made climate change, but would be put at even greater risk if Shell continues with its irresponsible plans to drill.

As Arctic ice melts at an increasingly rapid rate, oil companies like Shell want to use that as an opportunity to drill below waters that had once been frozen solid rather than heeding the warning it provides of how much our planet is warming.

If we have any chance of stopping them, we need to use this moment to hold Shell accountable for their actions and say enough is enough.

Will you take a moment to sign our petition to end Shell's reckless Arctic plans?

With your help we can protect one of our planet's most important places and those who live there. Thanks for adding your voice to our call today.

Best,

Subject: Thank you! Connecting this week?

Dear John,

It's been a while since we've been in touch, but you were very helpful with recommendations for our board/advisors early in the life of Asylum Access, and I've deeply appreciated that help. Thank you.

I'll be in DC briefly Tues-Thurs, and would love to thank you in person and share some updates on Asylum Access's first 10 years. I'd also love to hear if there's any way I can be of help in your capacities as chair of Hillary Clinton's campaign, or with Center for American Progress, given how present refugees issues are in today's news. (And of course, I'd love to hear how your Pomona grad son is doing -- I still remember that dinner at Georgetown where we discovered so many of us had Pomona connections!)

If you have a few minutes for a quick coffee/chat, I'd love to connect. I'm free Tues from 2:30-6:30 or around 9pm, Weds at 5:30, or Thursday any time before 10:45, or at 12:30 if we meet near Union Station.

Please let me know if you might have time for this. Hope you are well!

Warmly,
Emily

Subject: Petition: Reform lobbyist fundraising

Dear Friend,

Our plan to reform Washington is starting to get some attention -- nearly 5,000 of you signed our petition to permanently ban members of Congress from becoming lobbyists.

Now we hope you'll support another element of our plan to reform Washington. Our goal is to limit the undue influence of lobbyists, and we do that by restricting their ability to raise and bundle money -- click here to show your support.

The details of our plan are common sense and easy to understand:

- Ban members of Congress from soliciting campaign contributions from lobbyists while Congress is in session.
- Prohibit lobbyists from bundling large contributions -- preventing lobbyists from giving tens or hundreds of thousands of dollars in checks to members of Congress takes away one of the major ways lobbyists can carry undue influence over members of Congress.
- Tighten requirements around lobbyist registration -- our plan would make it much harder for people to act like lobbyists without officially registering.

Our plan already has the support of major watchdog groups, including the Campaign Legal Center, Citizens for Responsibility and Ethics in Washington, and the Sunlight Foundation. Add your voice to theirs by signing our petition.

Thank you for your support.

Just wanted to thank and congratulate you for the tremendous contributions you made to the president and to the Nation in your most recent tour in government. You made a huge difference on so many issues that matter, and as always you managed it with grace and good humor. The dinner you and Mary hosted for the big data team was just one of the typically generous things you did.

And your efforts will continue to bear fruit, as you started a lot of great things in motion. The upcoming Paulson institute seminar in China is only the most recent example.

Hope you get at least some down time. And as I said before if I can help in any way on energy and security issues please let me know.

All best

Subject: Ohio update

---

FYI--So...our media strategist Lori Lodes looked over Ohio again. It doesn't look there is an obvious path to saving a lot of money by focusing on the exurbs or rural communities. Cleveland and Columbus broadcast covers most of their exurbs. The cable penetration rates are poor in the areas we're looking at. You could spend more on commuter radio and mail, etc..

Lori is checking back with Will Robinson.

They are requesting a townhall style event, 60 minutes with 40 AFSCME members that would be held in Iowa. Amanda, do you mean check in with Matt/Molly on where this event would fit into schedule? I know the scheduling team is working on this too.

Are any of our close labor friends close to their presidents or board members? For example, I recall that Weeks used to work for APWU. Not sure if any of the same leaders are there still. But it might be worth a brainstorm conversation with our closest supporters to set up a little whip strategy.

Also, I'm doing a research project on their executive boards. Where are they from, background, is anyone of possible help internally. I'll have that done by Monday.

Last, I'm meeting with Heather Beaudoin and Erin Stevens on July 27th. Since both Hanley and Shelton are from New York can we put together a New York labor outreach plan to at least keep them neutral.

Hi everyone
A quick labor update tonight.

1. Lots of AFL-CIO internal drama around the AFT endorsement this week. AFSCME, IAM, IAFF holding strong. The contingent of unions upset with AFT include: ATU, APWU, CWA and Nurses (these unions are on my Sanders watch list).

2. Need to lock down IAM and AFSCME for endorsement. There are two events we need to schedule to secure their endorsement.

IAM Executive Board Meeting

IAM is letting me know if August 13th is a option for HRC. Their request was August 14th. I will know Monday. This event would be HRC accepting their endorsement.

AFSCME Small Member Roundtable-Iowa

The last step in AFSCME's endorsement process, we need to lock down. AFSCME's board meets to endorse HRC on September 10-11th. In order for the endorsement to happen I need 60 minutes in Iowa with AFSCME members and HRC in August. Can this be scheduled around another Iowa trip in August? AFSCME is after me for the date.

3. Next week AFT and IAFF-I have scheduled two days of in person meetings with the H4A team next week.

Tuesday, July 21st 11-3pm AFT Senior Staff

Wednesday, July 22nd 1-5pm IAFF Senior staff

Please stop by if you can! Both days I have scheduled for them to meet with Communications/Digital, Policy, Political, States and Delegate Selection. IAFF also requested a meeting with Advance. (*Robby please note dinner with IAFF on 7/22)

10/18/2016

4. AFL-CIO Executive Council Prep-Please let me know if I can do anything to assist. I flagged some issues for your attention around TPP (Malaysia), Cadillac Tax and HRC statement yesterday $15 in NH. Those are issues areas I think will come up.

5. SEIU-I've touched base with Peter Colavito with SEIU Intl. They would like to know about California dates for their home care event. In order to circle back with Local 1199, John would you be willing to touch base with George? I'm trying to think of a creative way to keep them with us while we move the home care event with HRC to California. Advice is welcomed!

6. NEA New Hampshire-I've kept in touch with our New Hampshire team and HRC is still on track to receive the NH NEA State endorsement, likely August 4th. This will be the first endorsement after AFT.

Subject: Help LCV elect Obama!

Dear John,

I can't overstate what is at stake in this election.

We are standing on the brink of environmental catastrophe. The Earth can't withstand 4 more years of inaction—by that time many of the effects of global warming could be irreversible.

That's why the League of Conservation Voters is fighting hard to elect environmental leaders this November, and we need your help to seize this historic opportunity.

Click here to make an online gift today that will help the League of Conservation Voters put Sen. Barack Obama in the Oval Office.

Plus, if you give before July 31, we'll send you a free "New Hope, New Energy" car magnet. But you must make your donation by July 31!

The records of McCain and Obama are very different on the challenges of energy and global warming. Barack Obama plans to raise fuel efficiency, invest billions in clean energy technology, increase production of renewable energy, and implement a cap and trade program that will reduce global warming pollution by 80%.

Senator McCain supports billions of dollars in tax breaks for big oil companies, opposes new fuel efficiency laws, opposes a national renewable electricity standard, and offers only $300 million for the development of clean technologies.

Barack Obama's plan for global warming and energy independence is the most substantive plan ever put forward by a nominee for president. At the League of Conservation Voters, we are ready to unleash an aggressive campaign program to make sure Barack Obama is elected president.

We maximize our impact by identifying independents and swing voters in key states. Through the media and a powerful grassroots effort, we persuade them to vote for our endorsed candidates. In a close race like this one, we can make a difference—with your support.

Just a quick heads up for you. There is a story coming from Politico with folks critical of AFT for endorsing HRC so early. There may be additional pieces from Time and Reuters.

The criticism comes from (1) some AFT members who don't support Randi – 3K in a petition; (2) other labor leaders (likely unnamed) who wanted AFT to wait till end of month when they do full interviews.

We've coordinated our response with AFT Comm Staff. They are doing most of the heavy lifting (as they should) to respond. We pointed out why it's helpful to have early endorsements and we'll be on record in "appreciation" of the endorsement.

Cheryl, I think you were off the call yesterday when we were talking about this, but, from what I'm seeing, AA vote was proportionally better than 2010 IN DISTRICTS/STATES WHERE A GOOD FIELD PROGRAM WAS RUN (important qualifier!) So the idea that AA vote fell off everywhere proportional to other voters isn't true. In some cases the opposite happened. And where smart programs were run, we got the 1-4 point lift field is expected to deliver. For example, AA voters were 24% of the electorate in Louisiana in 2010. They were 30% this year. But when you're getting 18% of the white vote, you just can't win. HRC will have a similar, although MUCH easier challenge when AA support drops to, say, 90% (vs 95-98% for Obama) and she needs to get white vote performance over 40%.

Subject: US HOUSE ELECTIONS AND NATIONAL EXIT POLL OBSERVATIONS

To: robby@terrymcauliffe.com

OVERVIEW AND HISTORY

As of November 9, 2014, slightly more than 75 million votes have been cast in US House elections, with Republicans holding a 6.8% advantage over Democrats; mirroring the 6.8% Republican margin in 2010. Yet Democrats lost 63 seats in 2010, and appear to have relinquished only 12-15 seats this year. Now it is true that the moderate level of losses is the number of seats taken out of play in 2010, it is also apparent that Democrats have once again won a majority of the mostly closely contested races in this year's election. This is attributable to a change in strategy from offense to defense in early October. Moreover, the state of play was accurately digested by the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee when undecided voters starting making up their minds and trended Republican.

The 6th year of a President's tenure is habitually unfavorable for the incumbent's party. Since 1966, the average loss has been 19.5 seats for a President in his second midterm. On the other hand, Ronald Reagan's second midterm yielded a modest 6 seat loss in 1986, while Democrats gained 5 seats in the second term of the Clinton Administration in 1998.

Accentuating the obstacles for incumbent parties in midterm elections, in 24 of 26 midterms since 1914, the opposition gained seats. Democrats sustained even greater losses in the last two midterms. President's Obama's party lost 75-78 seats in 2006 and 2010, compared to a net loss of 24.5 seats for Bill Clinton and 11 seats for George W. Bush. Obama's job approval has hovered around the 42% level, about 7% below the presidential midterm average over the past 60 years.

2014 OVERALL LANDSCAPE

As already depicted, Democrats lost 12-15 seats last week, with a popular vote deficit currently 6.8%. The partisan composition of the electorate was virtually unchanged from 2010 - 35% Democrats, 36% Republican and 29% Independent - 35%-35%-29% in 2010. House Democrats won 92% of their own party voters and only 5% of Republican voters. The Republican advantage among Independents was 12% - a 7% reduction relative to their share of the 2010 Independent vote, but still a fatal margin for Democrats. This data point may be overstated, as a majority of the Independents are partisan leaners in one direction or the other. In 2012, Democrats enjoyed a 5% partisan advantage, as more non-white voters participated in the election. In recent years, the electorate has been 5% less white in presidential election years.

The gender gap expanded in 2014, with men voting 51%-47% Democratic, a 2% increase over the 2010 election. Conversely, Republicans won the male vote by 16%, an offsetting 2% increase, with the overall gender gap reaching 20%. While appearing insignificant, the gender gap may have played a large role in the outcome of selected House races. In crucial midterm states - New York, Florida and California, initial exit poll data reveals the share of the male vote increased over 2010, and actually was larger than in the female share in New York, where Democrats lost 3 House seats.

Contributing to the overall decline in the total House vote, Latinos comprised only 8% of the electorate. Although 8% was the same percentage as in 2010, the rapid growth of the Latino population suggested that its share would rise in 2014. Although Democrats won the Latino vote by 62%-36%, their margin decreased by 4% compared to 2010, and by 12% relative to 2012. Democrats were counting on emulating the 71% Hispanic share of the vote earned in 2012. Low Latino turnout clearly cost Democrats Texas 23, and may have contributed to any losses that materialize in California. Competing in seats held by Republicans, for example California 10 and 21 and Colorado 6 were impossible without a large vote from Hispanic voters. Since 2012 when Republicans won less than 30% of the Hispanic vote, it would seem that matching President Obama's 46% margin may be extremely challenging now and in the future, unless the immigration debate explodes and eclipses other concerns.

The African-American vote was again instrumental in the success of several Democratic House voters. Even though Democrats won 89% of the African-American vote in 2014, it is a reminder of how difficult it will be to approach 95% without President Obama on the ballot. Democrats held an 83% advantage among Black voters in 2012 House elections, compared to 79% this year. The share of the Black vote increased from 12% to 13% from 2010 to 2014.

Looking at individual states, there are several alarming trends to note, although one must be cautious in the interpretation of the individual state exit poll data.

ILLINOIS - The state-wide share of Latino voters declined from 8% to 6% between 2010 and 2014. The African-American vote declined from 19% to 18%. While we have no discernible data about the Asian vote, it is important to point out that national exit polls suggested a large decline in the Democratic share of Asians. This may have contributed to the loss of Brad Schneider in Illinois 10, and closer than expected victories for Tammy Duckworth and Bill Foster.

NEW YORK - The margin, rather than the outcome, were surprises in New York 1 (Bishop) and especially New York 24 (Maffei). According to exit polls, the share of African-American voters was down from 18% in 2010 to only 13% in 2014. While the margin may be inflated, it is clear that African-Americans were unmotivated in 2014.

CALIFORNIA - Despite impressive Hispanic population growth, the share of the total declined from 22% to 20% compared to the previous midterm. Moreover, the African American vote was down from 10% to 8%. Examining the alarming decline in total votes in selected congressional districts, we know low turnout contributed to the potential defeats of Ami Bear (California 7) and Jim Costat (California 16), along with the closer than anticipated victories of Pete Aguilar (California 31) and Raul Ruiz (California 36).

Following discernible trends of the past few elections, the share of voters under 30 was only 13% in 2014, and the Democratic vote margin was a modest 7%. Conversely voters over 65 represented 20% of the total electorate, according to Republicans a 16% margin.

The always crucial Catholic vote favored Republicans by 9%, and the GOP share of the Jewish vote increased to 33%.

Perhaps the most critical data point from the midterm election was the loss of middle class voters earning $50,000 to $100,000 a year who favored Republican House candidates by an 11% margin.

CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT ANALYSIS .

Contests in Arizona 2, California 7 and 16, and to a lesser extent, California 26 and New York 25 may still be undecided. It appears that Democrats lost 12-15 seats in this year's midterm election.

Democrats won only 3 Republican held seats, defeating Republican incumbents in Nebraska 2 (Terry) and Florida 2 (Graham), while adding an open seat victory in California 31 (Miller).

Conversely, Republicans ousted between 10 and 13 Democratic incumbents: Florida 26 (Garcia), Georgia 12 (Barrow), Illinois 10 (Schneider), Illinois 12 (Enyart), Nevada 4 (Horsford), New Hampshire 1 (Shea-Porter), New York 1 (Bishop), New York 24 (Maffei), Texas 23 (Gallego) and West Virginia 3 (Rahall). The fate of California 7 (Bera), California 16 (Costa) and Arizona 2 (Barber) is still unknown.

Democrats also lost open seats in Iowa 1 (Braley), a close race that was impacted by the 8% defeat sustained by Bruce Braley in the Iowa US Senate race; Maine 2 (Michaud), a surprising result, given that a conservative 3rd party candidate amassed 11% of the vote, seemingly an impediment to the successful Republican candidate. Democrats, as anticipated lost 3 other open seats in New York 21 (Owens), North Carolina 7 (McIntyre) and a closer than anticipated defeat in Utah 4 (Mathieson). All of these losses, including the incumbent defeats materialized in districts defined as marginal, or likely to go Republican. by the DCCC.

There were only a limited number of defeats in Republican districts targeted by the DCCC. Predictably, when Mark Pryor's fortunes declined in the Arkansas US Senate race, Pat Hayes lost a chance to win in Arkansas 2. Similarly the landslide victory of Shelley Moore Capito in the West Virginia Senate contest doomed the strong campaign waged by Nick Casey in West Virginia 2. Still Casey came within 4 points of victory. Braley's anemic performance to a larger than expected defeat for Stacey Appel in the marginal 3rd district of Iowa, another race that was heavily targeted.

Rated as vulnerable, Democrats retained open seats in Massachusetts 6 (Tierney) and, Hawaii 1 (Hanabusa); Tempted to enter potentially .marginal open seat contests in Virginia 10, Michigan 8, New Jersey 3, Pennsylvania 6 and Arkansas 4, none of these races were competitive at the end of the day. A few marginal district Republican incumbents - Colorado 6 (Coffman), Michigan 1 (Benishek), Illinois 13 (Davis), Kansa 2 (Jenkins), Kansas 3 (Yoder), North Dakota 1 (Cramer), Michigan 6 (Upton), Michigan 7 (Walberg), Minnesota 2 (Kline), Pennsylvania 8 (Fitzpatrick), California 10 (Denham), California 21 (Valadao) and New York 23 (Reed) were prudently either not initially targeted, or abandoned when the final result became transparent. The less said about the potentially promising New York 11 race the better. Dominic Recchia ran an incompetent campaign. Moreover, a more qualified candidate may well have lost, given the disappointing turnout among Hispanics and Asians.

A WORD ABOUT INCUMBENT RACES

As already reviewed, Democrats lost 10-13 incumbents. Earlier in the cycle, when the Republican wave was far less conspicuous, I believed that Democrats would lose 8 or more incumbents, even in a more positive electoral environment. The ultimate goal of fighting the Republicans to a draw, or even gaining seats, was predicated on winning more Republican districts. When the Republican advantage became more obvious, it was no longer feasible to compete in more than a handful of GOP districts.

Had a strategic judgment not been made to emphasize incumbent protection, it is probable that more Democratic incumbents would have succumbed to the national trend, potentially mirroring what happened in 2010.

The following incumbent Democrats were reelected in marginal or even Republican leaning districts. Frontline and other marginal members across the country won against the backdrop of a negative national mood. :

ARIZONA 1 - Kirkpatrick
 ARIZONA 9 - Sinema
 CALIFORNIA 24 - Capps
 CALIFORNIA 26 - Brownlee
 CALIFORNIA 36 - Ruiz
 CALIFORNIA 52 - Peters
 CONNECTICUT 6 - Esty
 FLORIDA 18 - Murphy
 ILLINOIS 17 - Bustos
 IOWA 2 - Loebsack
 MINNESOTA 7 - Peterson
 MINNESOTA 8 - Nolan
 NEW HAMPSHIRE 2 - Kuster
 NEW YORK 18 - Maloney
 WASHINGTON 1 - Del Benne

This list may later include Arizona 2, California 7 and 16, as duly noted.

Although all other Democratic incumbents were reelected, some faced unexpectedly close contests. Why? : Clearly the national mood contributed to the potential loses. Other factors need to be noted: Unprecedented low turnout buffeted Louise Slaughter in New York 25 (Rochester area) and Jim Costa (Fresno) in California 16. Although he eventually won by 4%, Rep. Jim Himes race was unexpectedly tight as a result of low turnout in the urban portion of Connecticut 4, and a shocking outcome in the Maryland gubernatorial contest badly eroded support and turnout for John Delaney in Maryland 6. The absence of a state-wide election for Governor or US Senator clearly reduced the margin of victory for Emmanuel Cleaver in Missouri 5 (Kansas City).

A WORD ABOUT 2016

Realistically, regaining a House majority is an extremely remote prospect in 2016. A deficit of 30-33 seats is too much of a burden. Yet an expanded electorate, with more youth, African-Americans, Asians and Hispanics, will generate an environment favorable to gaining seats, perhaps even a considerable number.

Gaining even 10 seats, however, is a formidable task. Due to the second consecutive cycle of DCCC success in winning more close races than Republicans, the list of Democrats winning reelection by 10% or less will be 29-32 districts, compared to only 15-18 for Republicans. This is far from the only measure of potential marginality, but it is an initial indicator. Districts such as New Jersey 2, 3 and 5, New York 11 and 24, Pennsylvania 6 and 8, California 10 and 21, Florida 13, Iowa 3, Kansas 3, Kentucky 6, Michigan 1, Minnesota 2 and 3, Nevada 3, Washington 3 and Wisconsin 7, are likely to be more competitive than they were in 2014. None of these districts were decided by less than 10% this year.;

Subject: RE: Justice Scalia

Dean Treanor and Colleagues:

Like Mike Seidman, I also was put-off by the invocation of the "Georgetown Community" in the press release that Dean Treanor issued Saturday. I imagine many other faculty, students and staff, particularly people of color, women and sexual minorities, cringed at headline and at the unmitigated praise with which the press release described a jurist that many of us believe was a defender of privilege, oppression and bigotry, one whose intellectual positions were not brilliant but simplistic and formalistic.

I am not suggesting that J. Scalia should have been criticized on the day of his death, nor that the "community" should not be thankful for his willingness to meet with our students. But he was not a legal figure to be lionized or emulated by our students. He bullied lawyers, trafficked in personal humiliation of advocates, and openly sided with the party of intolerance in the "culture wars" he often invoked. In my mind, he was not a "giant" in any good sense.

It is tricky knowing what to say when a public figure like Scalia, or the late Robert Byrd, or other voices of intolerance, meet their death. But as an academic institution, I believe that we should be wary of contributing to the mystification of people because of the lofty official positions they achieved. I don't want to teach our students to hold someone like Scalia in reverence because he's a "Supreme Court Justice." Our proximity to official Washington provides an opportunity to see many public officials close-up, and to learn that there is nothing special that titles bestow—even a Supreme Court Justice can be a bigot, and there is no reason to be intimidated by the purported "brilliance" that others describe because, when you have a chance to see and hear such people close-up, the empowering effect is often, as it should be, de-mystification. (I was happy to meet Warren Burger as a law student for this very reason). We should never teach our students to be obsequious to those with power.

The "Georgetown Community" could mean many things. In one sense, it is simply a legally constituted set of formal relations, and in that sense perhaps "the Dean," duly appointed by "the President," speaks for that "institution" of formal legal relations.

But there is also a lived community that we inhabit, within the interstices of the formal and contractually defined roles, a community that exists in our relations with each other and with our co-workers and our students, a community that is constituted in our hallways and class rooms and lunch rooms, and in our affection for and commitment to one another, and, for many of us, a vision of how we could all be together in the law school, disagreeing often but always trying to be sensitive and empathic to all members of our community.

That is the "Georgetown Community" that I feel a part of, a lived community of tolerance, affection, and care that so many have built for so long here. That "community" would never have claimed that our entire community mourns the loss of J. Scalia, nor contributed to his mystification without regard for the harm and hurt he inflicted. That community teaches critique, not deference, and empowerment, not obsequiousness.

Sometimes the two senses of community might merge—the formal, legal institution might be so at one with the lived community that its legitimacy to speak for the "community" flows organically. But that is not our situation.

Sincerely,
Gary

Our norms of civility preclude criticizing public figures immediately after their death. For now, then, all I'll say is that I disagree with these sentiments and that expressions attributed to the "Georgetown Community" in the press release issued this evening do not reflect the views of the entire community..

This is such sad news.

I will never forget his lecture to our first year class in November. We thought he would leave right after the lecture, but he stayed in the Health and Fitness lobby long after the talk was over, engaging with students informally about anything they wanted to talk about, speaking with characteristic humor, passion, and intelligence. I know they will always treasure that memory. He cared deeply about the law and about those embarking on careers in the law. We have lost a giant.

I think we also need to give some thought to how we slam the Republican Party and Trump for reducing the level of discourse in our politics, for thinking hate and loudness are the same as strength and resoluteness, and for thinking that the way to deal with people who disagree with you is to belittle them.

Sanders Blames Clinton for Decline of Middle Class in Trade-Battered Michigan

March 4, 2016

Contact: Michael Briggs \(802\) 233-8653233-8653)

TRAVERSE CITY, Mich. – Bernie Sanders on Friday said “disastrous” trade deals backed by Hillary Clinton decimated Michigan manufacturing, threw Michigan workers out of decent-paying jobs and are “one of the reasons that the middle class in the country is disappearing.”

“If the people of Michigan want to make a decision about which candidate stood with workers against corporate America and against these disastrous trade agreements, that candidate is Bernie Sanders,” he said to cheers from 2,125 supporters here at the Streeters Center.

Starting with the job-killing North American Free Trade Agreement, Clinton supported trade deals when she was secretary of state, a U.S. senator and first lady.

Sanders joined picket lines to protest NAFTA and other trade deals “crafted by “the big-money interests and corporations,” Sanders said.

“Hillary Clinton was on the other side of many of these trade agreements,” Sanders added.

Not only was Clinton on the wrong side of a series of business-backed trade deals, she also has only grudgingly questioned the biggest trade deal of all time. Until an election-eve conversion, she had backed the Trans-Pacific Partnership, a proposed 12-nation Pacific Rim trade deal which would be the biggest in history.

Meanwhile, Sanders' campaign responded to Clinton's assertion in Detroit that she has a plan to restore manufacturing jobs. “The American people are sick and tired of establishment politicians who promise to create manufacturing jobs during campaign season but support trade policies that make it easier to outsource these jobs the day after they get elected,” Sanders said in a prepared statement.

Meanwhile, Sanders' campaign on Friday distributed a video showing Clinton in India in 2012 discussing what she said were “pluses and minuses” to outsourcing U.S. jobs.

Dear John:

I hope 2015 is starting off well for you!

The Institute Policy for Integrity at NYU Law School, which I direct, recently released a policy brief on regulation of methane emissions from the oil and gas sector. Our research summarizes many of the relevant scientific and economic studies, and identifies potential regulatory pathways to reduce these emissions. The policy brief, authored by our Policy Director, Jayni Hein, is attached. Our main findings are:

- Methane is 86 times more damaging to the climate than carbon dioxide on a 20-year timeframe, and 34 times more powerful on a 100-year timeframe. Nearly 90 percent of projected 2018 oil and gas sector methane emissions will come from infrastructure that existed in 2011—sources not regulated by EPA's 2012 volatile organic compounds regulations.
- Because of the commercial value of the natural gas that can be conserved by redirecting natural gas back to productive use, many reduction techniques and technologies have low net cost to the energy producer and large net social benefits. Even without the resale value of natural gas, these measures can still be cost-benefit justified due to the social cost of methane emissions — the cost that an additional unit of emissions is projected to impose on society — as well as the health benefits of reduced smog and hazardous air pollutants, which are co-emitted with methane during oil and natural gas production.
- State laws and voluntary measures are inadequate to control emissions. Because methane emissions are a global externality, individual states will experience only a fraction of methane's harms, leading to an incentive to under-regulate. Without regulation, most companies will not reduce all of the methane that is cost-benefit justified according to the social cost of methane.
- Given the recent and projected growth of the natural gas and oil sector, federal regulation of new and existing sources is necessary to secure sharp reductions, and Clean Air Act Section 111 is the most promising reduction pathway. By setting methane emissions standards under Section 111 of the Clean Air Act, the EPA can reduce emissions at new and existing sources in the natural gas and oil sector by up to 48 percent. These standards would require the use of available, low-cost technology. They would build upon the EPA's 2012 regulations, which mainly addressed emissions from new natural gas wells, and not oil wells or existing sources.

In short, we find that federal regulation pursuant to Section 111 is a commonsense solution that complements the growing natural gas industry while curbing potent methane pollution. We also wrote an op-ed on this topic: <http://thehill.com/blogs/pundits-blog/energy-environment/228153-curbing-fugitive-methane-costs-little-buys-time-on>

Please let me know if you would like to discuss this further.

Utility Sees 65% Increase in Reliability with Smart Grid in Chattanooga

By Lisa Cohn on Jan 20, 2016 08:45 am

Two hundred million dollars may seem a lot of money to spend on a smart grid, but for EPB, a utility in Chattanooga, the investment was well worth it, said David Wade, COO of EPB. The company—one of the largest publicly owned electric distributors in the country, with 170,000 customers -- has seen a 65% increase in reliability as the result of its smart grid.

LAST NIGHT THE HOUSE PASSED A BILL THAT WOULD ALLOW STATES TO DEFUND PLANNED PARENTHOOD!

John, we've got until the FEC deadline tonight at midnight to ensure we're able to hold everyone who voted against Planned Parenthood accountable.

DONATE NOW >>

Here it is plain and simple – this legislation means that low-income women who rely on Medicaid may have nowhere to turn for their healthcare.

Step up now so that we can clean Congress of these anti-Planned Parenthood Republicans.

Attachments: 2015-10-05 Iowa Town Hall topper.docx

Per team Iowa's preference, we're focusing on health care for tomorrow's town hall topper but also giving her a few lines on guns she can use if she wants, either in topper or later. Would be great if folks could take a look.

US Poverty line and Federal Wasteful Expenses

Dear Elizabeth Warren,

Living in Israel for my entire life I am aware nevertheless about Federal unnecessary expenses that fall eventually on US Citizens' shoulders. Is it unreasonable to invest 200 millions in a single giant plane if you aren't in War having virtually no enemies on your threshold! I have been trying for latest five years persuading US Administration to attack Narcotic Vegetation in Afghanistan as well as in Central America stopping that way permeation of Drugs into its territory. To my very great astonishment, none of my letters to US Agencies (including the White House) has been responded! Watching TV Program dedicated to US Arsenal Size I learned that many thousands of Unmanned Aircraft Vehicles (very cheap by comparison) are stored Idled in Magazines instead of launching vehement strikes on the Cruel Nine Eleven Enemy preemptively. Several hundreds of UAV could have transmuted world's entire Narcotic Vegetation that supply Heroine and Cocaine for Terror Organizations( for their Enormous Armament Acquisition) to Arid Deserts by Chemical Defoliation from the Air .To my great surprise no response has come meanwhile to my mail box against the interests of the US and Entire Civilization! Could you US Senators intercede?

All the best

Gideon Rodeh

- 1) You promised Paul Eggerman that you would get him in touch with Judy Fader so that he could get involved in your health care work.
- 2) Josh wanted you to check on if Obama used "Greedy" in response to the way he spoke about the health insurers, he wanted info (possibly a summary) of the current proposed health care bill, he wanted to know if Medicare pays 40% less to hospitals on procedures than private insurers

I think it is important that you send him an e-mail that makes him feel like you heard him and that at the very least you are trying to be responsive to him. It did not go great, but it did not go as badly as you think. He thinks you are brilliant, but you are so political that you were not willing to be honest with him. I think a nice email that shows that you heard him and value the dialogue that is written in a very straight forward way would be perfect.

- 3) Is there any immediate follow-up (other than the thank you letter I am sending over) or materials that you should send him to get him involved in a way that may produce funding?
- 4) You were great at the reception – I think we should get a lot out of it, but we will see!

John,

Not sure whether Ash has yet reached you, but here is an update on who is in the mix:

**Ash is considering four candidates – Winnefeld, Commandant of the Marine Corp Joseph Dunford, Chief of Staff of the Air Force Mark Welsh, and PACOM Commander Admiral Sam Locklear.

**Dempsey nominally supports Welsh, in part because he highly values consensus building as an essential quality for the role. Winnefeld is seen as the clearest thinker and most reliable performer, but often too abrasive to military and civilian leaders. Welsh and Dunford, meanwhile, are seen as great leaders but weak on strategic thinking, and Ash's Chief of Staff, Eric Fanning, himself the former Under Secretary of the Air Force, does not support Welsh's candidacy. Dunford has also asked Ash to remain Commandant of the Marine Corps because of his view, shared by the Secretary's office, that there is not a strong enough successor to replace him at this turbulent time for the Corps. Locklear, meanwhile, may drop from the slate absent Ash's extraordinary intervention because as soon as the Fat Leonard IG report pops, Locklear will be forced to retire unless assigned to another four star billet. (A successor for him at PACOM has already been announced and confirmed.) Eric Fanning is doubtful they could keep Locklear in play.

**Ash is slated to give the President his recommendation later this week.

Bottom line: the White House has a real choice in the sense that each candidate has identified pros and cons, though as you know I think the choice is clear.

When I heard that Rice is not opposed to but also not particularly excited by a Winnefeld candidacy, I discreetly shared the memo with Salman Ahmed.

I've attached the final memo in case you want to back channel it to Denis.

Awesome, thanks!

I would have thought no shot before I got here based on a couple PPP polls, but anecdotally PG and Ted seem to have comparable support from my interactions on the phones and at the door, PG and the super PAC supporting him are both up with ads the last 10 days and Ted is not and PG is way better on social media, they've both gotten some key endorsements, a lot of people are appalled by the campaign Ted has run, and the volatile mood of the electorate seems to help PG. But Ted's name recognition may matter more than everything else. Fingers crossed for Hillary and PG tomorrow!

One thought on her doing press on Sunday vs Monday: whether the press wants to cover it or not, we have pretty hefty policy to roll out on Monday, so if we get this out of the way Sunday, the policy gives us a nice way to move forward. We could even have her come out against Keystone on Monday as well (not sure where that stands), which will solicit criticism but that might help distract from emails. Kind of like bundling taxes, health, and email last Friday.

In any case, I would vote for having her address this Sunday, so we can legitimately claim she's trying to move on and address what voters care about on Monday.
Just a thought.

The only point I would make is that I think, as we discussed, we need an overture that there's been a shift, that she needs to do something to convey that. We will couch this from a staff level in larger terms, but I think she needs to nod to that mentality too, sooner rather than later.

I think calling a reporter out of the blue would check that box, but maybe either way we need something a little more specific in here that says she will be on the campaign trail in the coming days, and she looks forward to answering questions about this, and about her plans for America's future, etc. You could stick it in the last graph pretty easily.

STATEMENT

I understand that many Americans have questions about the stories they hear on the news about emails and servers. As I said back in March, it clearly would've been better if I'd just used a government email account. Using a personal email account was a mistake, plain and simple. I am committed to doing everything I can to clear up any remaining confusion about this. That's why I've asked the State Department to publish 55,000 pages of my work emails. I've also repeatedly offered to answer questions before Congress and I look forward to doing so in October.

I hope the State Department and other relevant agencies will sort out as quickly as possible which emails are appropriate to release to the public. In the meantime, my team has worked with the Department to ensure these files are stored in a safe and secure manner. To put to rest any on-going security questions from other agencies, I have directed my team to give my email server, as well as a thumb drive containing copies of all the emails already provided to the State Department, to the Department of Justice.

Going forward, I will continue doing my part for transparency and accountability. I'm also going to focus on what's most important to everyday American families -- raising incomes, making college more affordable, and helping families get ahead and stay ahead. That's why I'm running for President and that's what I'll be working on every single day.

Subject: RE: Email statement

It's a good statement. Two suggestions.

1) I can see why you might not want to say who the turnover was to, but it seems to me omitting this may be misinterpreted and certainly will trigger another round of questioning. This may defeat the whole point of the exercise. The statement could be read to imply we turned over the thumb drive and server to the State Department—which we didn't ("There they go again—misleading, devious, non-transparent, tricky etc.”). I would recommend saying “to the Department of Justice.”

2) Maybe it’s only me, but “hand over” seems a little pejorative—how about just “turn over”?

Subject: Re: Email statement

Here's a draft of a short statement we could release today from HRC, hopefully to be followed in the coming days by more fulsome comments on camera.

STATEMENT

I understand that many Americans have questions about the stories they hear on the news about emails and servers. As I said back in March, it clearly would’ve been better if I’d just used a government email account. Using a personal email account was a mistake, plain and simple. I am committed to doing everything I can to clear up any remaining confusion about this. That’s why I’ve asked the State Department to publish 55,000 pages of my work emails. I’ve also repeatedly offered to answer questions before Congress and I look forward to doing so in October.

I hope the State Department and other relevant authorities will sort out as quickly as possible which emails are appropriate to release to the public. In the meantime, my team has worked with the Department to ensure these files are stored in a safe and secure manner. To put to rest any on-going security questions from other agencies, I have directed my team to hand over my email server, as well as a thumb drive containing copies of all the emails already provided to the State Department.

Going forward, I will continue doing my part for transparency and accountability. I’m also going to focus on what’s most important to everyday American families -- raising incomes, making college more affordable, and helping families get ahead and stay ahead. That’s why I’m running for President and that’s what I’ll be working on every single day.

Hope things go well with the results tonight. These two ladies are friends: Anna Burger used to run Change to Win and was Andy Stern's deputy at SEIU. And Cathy was at Commonwealth and now retired. Both would like to be helpful with the HRC campaign.

Would love to catch up once the dust settles a bit. If you want me to do any follow-up with these ladies, happy to do it. Not sure what Cathy wants to do, but Anna would do a bit of anything needed. She worked hard for the President in '08 and is eager to be helpful this year.

Cheers,
Kathleen

Hi John-

By the time I got back to the office today the travel options for tomorrow had narrowed substantially. Unfortunately all flights from NY to DC leaving after 3:00 PM are totally full. I think that right now are best options are as follows:

1. The Royal Sprinter (bus) from NY to DC-- $95 *this will go quickly*
2. Rent a a car one- way NY to DC -- about $100
- I am planning on coming down to DC this weekend anyway and can drive
3. Megabus or Peter Pan bus at 7:00 or 6:30 (arrive union station) --$25

We can also look in to the possibility of you leaving Friday morning, although I know that isn't ideal. Let me know if you'd like me to explore options.

Subject: Copyright

Hi John -

I took the liberty of exploring whether and how we might go about changing the copyright on the book. As Julie's note indicates, the first batch of books will have to go with the original copyright of CAP. I'm no lawyer, but I think just to be safe we should formally shift the copyright to your name (or our names jointly) rather than the institution. That way, there will be no later confusion about the book being an official CAP product and less of an issue if it comes up. Like I said earlier, 99 percent of the book can easily be defended as educational, c3 work but some opponent or intrepid government bureaucratic might find cause to argue otherwise on the other 1 percent.

We should also think about categorizing some of the work on the book on another account - c4 or something independent. Let me know what you think and I'll proceed accordingly.

Take care - John

Hi John,

I looked into this and it's too late to change it in the book. But if you and John feel strongly that it should be changed, we could make it happen for reprints and the paperback. We would have to do a contract amendment because right now CAP is the "Author." The contract would be changed to have John Podesta as the author, and we could put your name in the contract as well, I believe.

Let me know what you decide. I'm happy to get that started for you.

All best,

Julie

John --

This week has been full of ups and downs, but your support was the consistency we could count on.

We just wanted to take a minute to express our gratitude: your support for Cheri has been absolutely unparalleled.

On Monday night, we had this year's strongest showing of grassroots support for Cheri, and we could never have done it without you.

Thank you for standing behind Cheri and our campaign.

We're so proud to have you on our team.

I'm also open to other cities -- NY, LA, wherever.

Dear John,

I asked Herb Sandler for your email because I wanted to contact you regarding the Pacific Remote Islands Marine National Monument. I saw your tweet the other day that it was one of your proudest accomplishments and I wanted to say thank you, from the bottom of my heart, for all that you have done, not only for the PRIMNM, but for all the wildlands that you have helped conserve. We have no greater resource and legacy to leave our children than these special, fragile and very important places. I truly appreciate all the work you have done at the WH with climate change and so many other things. You have really helped move the needle on so many issues of importance to me, and to all of us.

I know you will be busy with your new job but just in case you have a free moment, I wanted to invite you and your wife to Palmyra Atoll, part of the PRIMNM, about 500 miles south of the Big Island. Nature Conservancy manages a research station out there for most of the year, but in the fall there are a few groups that visit there. I have been four times now and can't tell you what an amazing "life soup" it is out there and I would hope that you and your wife could come visit it yourselves to see. The birds, the fish, sharks and mantas are really spectacular in their abundance. And I am not sure if you are a fisherman but the bone fishing is fantastic too. We would love to have you visit this special place that you have helped protect. The trip dates would be Oct 22-27, leaving out of Honolulu. I know this is a long shot, but when I saw your tweet, I thought I really must at least reach out to you and extend an invitation. Given the nature of your new job, a few days off the grid might be just what you need before the run up to the election.

All my very best to you. Please let me know if it is possible and we will make it happen. Or perhaps after the election?
Anne

I feel I should write you all an update but I'm not sure what to write. It is very much Groundhog Day around here. I wake at the same time every morning and eat the same breakfast in more or less the same seat at the same DFAC every single day of the week. The first couple days I was here they served mango yogurt and it was the best. Every morning I excitedly approach the yogurt bin to discover, again, no mango. Friday is Steak Night. Saturday lunch is Mongolian Grill. Thursday is Afghan (I seem to be the only one that actually eats it).

I suppose that I should be thankful that my experience here is routine. Excitement is likely synonymous with danger. But the days go slow.

Having said that, I'm somehow 16% of the way done. As slow as the days seem to pass, the weeks have gone by quickly. We're down to a skeleton staff at Camp Phoenix as folks redeploy to the states or move within Afghanistan. Amazingly, I am now the senior USAF Captain in the legal office. In a matter of weeks I've seen three go home and as a result I'm no longer the new guy; I'm the experienced veteran.

Hope you all are well. I love and miss you!

Hi again John,

We are now sorted - arriving Thursday evening and departing Monday evening. I have time Friday or Monday morning or over the weekend. Let me know when suits. I look forward to seeing you.

My best,
Mattie

It has been quite some time since we've caught up, but I am reaching out and wondering where we can connect when I'll be in DC at the end of next week. (I currently live in Amsterdam. My father-in-law and the source of my new name Bekink (I suppose more interesting than Johnstone, but I was never sure I would actually change my name until I did!) is actually the Dutch Ambassador in Washington, but this trip is to see a friend sworn in to a new position at State.)

I know you're probably busy as usual, so no worries if not. We are working on our travel plans now, but I believe we'll arrive in DC on Wed 25 Feb or Thurs 26 Feb and will stay through the weekend. We have the swearing in on the afternoon of Fri 27 Feb. Otherwise, I am flexible.

JULY 20, 2012 SHOOTING IN AURORA, CO. AND COLORADO GUN LAWS

q Background: Early on July 20, 2012 , 12 people were killed and at least 50 others wounded when a gunman wearing a bullet-proof vest opened fire and tossed a canister of tear gas in a midnight screening of Batman in a suburban movie theater in Aurora, Colorado, outside Denver.

Ø The victims being treated as of 10am ET include a three-month-old baby and a six-year old girl. [\[1\]](#)

Ø The suspect is a 24-year old man named James Holmes and was until recently a graduate student at the University of Colorado Medical School. He drove to the movie theater in a car with Tennessee license plates.

Ø Four guns were recovered at the scene: a 5.56 caliber rifle, a 12-gauge shotgun, and two handguns. [\[2\]](#)

Ø This was the deadliest mass shooting in Colorado since the Columbine High School massacre on April 20, 1999, when two students opened fire at a high school in Littleton, CO, about 15 miles west of Aurora, killing 13 people and wounding 26 others before killing themselves.

q Federal Law on Purchasing and Possessing Guns: Since 1968, following the assassinations of Martin Luther King, Jr., and Robert F. Kennedy, federal law has prohibited ten categories of people from possessing or buying guns, including convicted felons, drug abusers, those with a history of serious mental illness, and illegal aliens. [\[3\]](#)

Ø Federal background checks: Every gun purchase from a federally licensed firearms dealer is subject to a background check. Federally licensed dealers run background checks at the time of purchase through the National Instant Criminal Background Check System (NICS), the FBI-run database of people who, under state or federal law, are prohibited from buying guns.

§ No checks by private sellers: Federal law does not require "private sellers," including unlicensed sellers at gun shows, to run a background check before selling a gun.

· An estimated 40% of U.S. gun sales are conducted by unlicensed "private sellers." [\[4\]](#)

Ø Assault Weapons: Congress banned assault weapons and high-capacity magazines in 1994 but allowed the law to expire in 2004.

q Colorado Gun Laws: Colorado state gun laws go beyond basic federal law, most notably in that Colorado has closed the Gun Show Loophole, although it does not otherwise regulate assault weapons or extended magazines.

Ø Gun Show Loophole: Colorado requires a background check for sales at gun shows, although it does not require a background check for other private sales. [\[5\]](#) In 2011, 336,296 NICS checks were conducted in Colorado.

§ All four guns used in the Columbine massacre had been purchased at a gun show.

§ A year later, Colorado citizens voted 70%-30% in favor of Amendment 22, closing the Gun Show Loophole in their state and requiring a background check for every gun sale at a gun show.

Ø Carry Concealed Weapons in Colorado: Colorado has a robust handgun concealed carry framework which places higher standards for concealed carry privileges than are required by federal law or the laws of a number of other states, including:

§ Prohibitions on carrying by dangerous individuals, such as: Individuals who "chronically and habitually use alcohol." [\[6\]](#)

§ Firearm safety training requirement: Applicants must complete a certified firearms safety training course that includes training on the safe handling of a firearm, or otherwise demonstrate competency with a handgun.<sup>[7]</sup>

§ Age restriction: Applicants must be at least 21 years of age.<sup>[8]</sup>

§ Law enforcement discretion: Local law enforcement has limited discretion to approve or deny a carry permit if the applicant will present a danger to self or others based on the applicant's documented previous behavior.<sup>[9]</sup>

§ Resident requirement: Applicants must be a resident of Colorado.<sup>[10]</sup>

§ Reciprocity: Colorado recognizes concealed carry permits from 30 other states, including Tennessee.

Ø Assault Weapons: Colorado does not regulate assault weapons or extended magazines.

Ø Firearm Homicides: In 2009 (the most recent data available), there were 108 firearm homicides in Colorado.<sup>[11]</sup>

Subject: 91 years

John,

Ninety-one years ago today, women won the right to vote when the 19th amendment was enacted. In an era when women occupy corner offices, serve as Supreme Court justices and travel the world representing America, it's easy to forget that we won this right less than a century ago.

Today, we celebrate this victory; the women who fought those battles to end slavery and for women's suffrage inspire us. Women have always blazed a path for the next generation to carry the torch further. That's why I created Off The Sidelines, an initiative to empower women to get involved in the political process and make their voices heard.

For me, getting off the sidelines means women making a difference by speaking out about the issues that matter to them. How about you?

Click here to share what getting off the sidelines means to you and join Off The Sidelines.

The fact is, we still have a long way to go until women have full equality. Currently in the US, women make on average 78 cents for every dollar a man makes; and even though women make up 51% of the population, we hold just 17% of seats in Congress and only 6 governorships; and as a result of the 2010 election, for the first time in 30 years, the percentage of women in Congress actually declined. This is unacceptable.

The fact remains that too many women are sitting on the sidelines – we must get them involved. It can be as simple as registering to vote, writing a letter to the editor, giving money to a female candidate who shares your values or running for office yourself. There are so many ways we can get more women involved in the political process.

Click here to sign up at Off The Sidelines and share what getting off the sidelines means to you.

In nine short years we will mark a full century since women won the right to vote. This next decade will be crucial not only for the future of women, but also for the future of America. I know we can and will do more because we have to. We are the solution.

Sincerely,
Kirsten Gillibrand

Subject: Amy Dacey: Here's what happened with NGP VAN, the Sanders Campaign, and the Clinton Campaign

Here's what happened with NGP VAN, the Sanders Campaign, and the Clinton Campaign
By AMY DACEY

And here are the steps we are taking to address the problem

The Democratic National Committee, through its software partner NGP VAN, provides tools for Democratic campaigns that are invaluable and second to none. This week, there was error with that system, however, which led to an incident involving the Sanders campaign.

We want to lay out exactly what happened so that people better understand why the DNC needed to suspend the Sanders campaign's access to our system and how we've been working to fully resolve a serious problem—and get everyone back to work electing a Democrat to the White House in 2016.

On Wednesday morning, NGP VAN applied a new software patch to the DNC's voter database system, and because of an error in the code, users were capable of accessing some limited, yet extremely valuable information belonging to other campaigns for a very brief window of time. Even though the glitch opened access, users still needed to take deliberate steps to seek out such information.

It's important to make a few things clear from the start. At no point were donor records, financial information, or volunteer data exposed between campaigns. At no point was any data exposed to the public. With the correction of the glitch and further audits by NGP VAN, we are confident now that the data within the system is secure.

Once NGP VAN had taken steps to contain the glitch, the DNC directed NGP VAN to conduct a thorough analysis to:

Identify any users who may have accessed information from another campaign inappropriately,

Pinpoint exactly what actions any such users took in the system, and Report these findings to the DNC so we would know what, if any, data was actually acquired.

As a result of this analysis, NGP VAN found that campaign staff on the Sanders campaign, including the campaign's national data director, had accessed proprietary information about which voters were being targeted by the Clinton campaign—and in doing so violated their agreements with the DNC.

These staffers then saved this information in their personal folders on the system, and over the course of the next day, we learned that at least one staffer appeared to have generated reports and exported them from the system.

None of this is in dispute. It's fully documented in the system logs. And these details reveal nothing less than a serious violation of the agreements governing the use of this data. Underscoring that fact is the point that the Sanders campaign has fired their national data director and indicated further disciplinary actions may be taken pending the results of their own investigation.

When we understood what initially happened, we asked the Sanders campaign to tell us who exactly accessed Hillary for America information, share their understanding of what data was accessed, describe what was done with that information, and detail how the campaign intended to discipline the staffers involved.

On Thursday, further NGP VAN analysis revealed that it was very likely that a user had taken data out of the system during the breach. Upon learning that, the DNC had to suspend the Sanders campaign's access to the voter file to ensure the integrity of the system. This action was not taken to punish the Sanders campaign—it was necessary to ensure that the Sanders campaign took appropriate steps to resolve the issue and wasn't unfairly using another campaign's data. This temporary suspension was well within the DNC's authority. Moreover, the DNC was left with little choice in the matter when the Sanders campaign declined to respond in a timely manner to the requests for assistance with an investigation.

On Thursday, the Sanders campaign did move to fire its national data director. But we still weren't provided the information we needed from the campaign until late in the evening on Friday. Once they complied with our prior request and provided documentation that we were then able to review, we immediately restored the Sanders campaign's access to the voter file—as was always our intention and as we had advised well before they sued the Committee.

And the information obtained so far shows that the DNC's concern to have a full, thorough inquiry was fully justified: As confirmed by the Sanders campaign in the account given the DNC Friday evening, one of the employees of the campaign involved in the misconduct tried to delete the notes they made recording their accessing of Clinton campaign data to hide his activities.

The next step is to continue to investigate the incident with the help of an independent auditor. This is necessary to confirm, as the Sanders campaign has assured us, that the data that was inappropriately accessed is no longer in possession of the Sanders campaign. The Sanders campaign has agreed to fully cooperate with the continuing DNC investigation of this breach.

The DNC has also instructed NGP VAN to conduct a review process of their internal procedures to identify how this mistake was allowed to happen and prevent further such mistakes. The DNC is currently beginning the process of securing an additional, independent audit by a data security firm of NGP VAN's procedures.

We are glad that all parties are moving forward and that the candidates and Democrats can refocus on engaging voters to show how our party will continue growing the economy and keep Americans safe.

I have also put in language, more like her Brookings speech, on Iran.

Ambassador -

We are planning to run an op-ed from HRC in the Forward next week ahead of Bib's visit. The intent is to make this more about the relationship and her personal connection, and go lighter on the policy side (though of course still addressing that). We'd be grateful for your comments and feedback - this draft has not yet been through the speechwriters so stylistically is likely to change, but given the time crunch we'd like your input on substance in parallel.

With thanks, as always, for your help,

What You Need to Know Today in Politics

Carly Fiorina speaking to the news media after the fourth Republican debate in Milwaukee on Tuesday. Michael Appleton for The New York Times

Even With No Clear Winners, Debates Bring Word of Momentum

By MAGGIE HABERMAN

Though the fourth Republican presidential debate had no clear winners, several candidates were able to leave the stage with some pep in their steps, including one who had previously ridden a strong debate performance from the “undercard” stage to the main one, and another who responded to the opposite demotion with a strong performance of his own.

When the dust settled after the Republican presidential debate on Tuesday, two lesser-followed figures were part of the next day’s discussion – Gov. Chris Christie of New Jersey and Carly Fiorina.

Mr. Christie performed ably in the so-called undercard debate against Gov. Bobby Jindal of Louisiana; Mike Huckabee, the former Arkansas governor; and Rick Santorum, the former Pennsylvania senator.

His message was not dissimilar to that of both Jeb Bush and Gov. John R. Kasich of Ohio during the prime-time debate: Electability is of signature importance against Hillary Rodham Clinton in a general election.

It was also similar to the argument Rudolph W. Giuliani made as a Republican presidential candidate in the 2008 primaries, that he was the best person to defeat Mrs. Clinton down the road, and would not be pulled too far to the right.

But the question of electability is running up against deep anger among Republican base voters, and it ultimately did not matter in 2008 either, though Mr. Giuliani was a far less conservative candidate than many of those who took the stage last night.

Then there's Ms. Fiorina, who was well received in some quarters for her handling of foreign policy questions during the prime-time debate.

"When Fiorina involved herself in an ongoing foreign policy debate that was taking place on stage, she didn't just upstage Trump, she upstaged Jeb Bush and John Kasich and a vital campaign issue," said Craig Robinson, a former Republican Party of Iowa executive director and the man behind the conservative news site the Iowa Republican.

Where it may take Mr. Christie and Ms. Fiorina is unclear. But they made their presences felt.

What We're Watching Today

— At a ceremony at the White House, President Obama will award the Medal of Honor to Capt. Florent A. Groberg, retired, for rushing a suicide bomber in Afghanistan in 2012, shoving him away from his unit and driving him to the ground before his explosives detonated. Four Americans were killed in the attack, but his actions saved many others. — Peter Baker

— Mr. Bush will hold a town-hall-style event in Grand Rapids, Mich.; Senator Marco Rubio of Florida will speak to the South Carolina Chamber of Commerce; Mr. Christie, who has staked much of his chances on the New Hampshire primary, will be on Day 2 of a three-day swing through Iowa, with several events, including "An Honest Conversation About Our Entitlement Crisis"; Mr. Trump and Mrs. Fiorina will also be in Iowa.

— Mrs. Clinton, who has made several appearances on television shows like "The Ellen DeGeneres Show," "Saturday Night Live" and "The Late Show With Stephen Colbert," all in a seeming effort to show her lighter side, will appear with Kelly Ripa and Michael Strahan on the "Live With Kelly and Michael."

Poll Shows Hillary Clinton Maintaining Lead Over Sanders

By PATRICK HEALY AND GIOVANNI RUSSONELLO

Despite a month of sharpened attacks from Senator Bernie Sanders of Vermont, Mrs. Clinton has support from 52 percent of Democratic primary voters, according to a New York Times/CBS News survey released on Thursday, while Mr. Sanders has backing from 33 percent. In an early October CBS News poll, she led Mr. Sanders 56 percent to 32 percent.

On Minimum Wage, Ben Carson Is No Longer an Outsider Among Republicans

By THOMAS KAPLAN

While Democrats support raising the minimum wage, the Republican field has been overwhelmingly opposed. Mr. Carson was an exception to that rule. But by Tuesday's debate, he had fallen in line with the Republican orthodoxy.

Jeb Bush Offers a Chest Bump 'for Every Convert'

By ASHLEY PARKER

After his final event of the day in Iowa on Wednesday, Mr. Bush posed for selfies, shook hands with voters and bumped pectoral regions with a man who he said had shifted his support from Senator Ted Cruz of Texas.

Senator Vitter's Race for Governor Could Bring Together the Senate

By CARL HULSE

David Vitter of Louisiana, a Republican, is in a rough and highly personal battle to win the governor's mansion back home. Oddly enough, both Senate Republicans and Democrats have ample reason to want him to win.

Chelsea,

I'm glad the board meeting was a fruitful one and we are at a solid consensual framework on donors and the rest. I still think a clearer checklist on donor approval going forward is a good thing to have but we can let the dust settle a bit before embarking on this.

I was obviously excited about your mother's announcement. I had heard John Podesta is here May 11 and if he is doing meetings around this would love to see him and thought you would know the best way to facilitate this. I have not been in touch with him since I was on the CCI advisory board with him.

Many thanks,

Mala

Daniel J. Jones Joins The Daschle Group

Daniel J. Jones has joined The Daschle Group, A Public Policy Advisory of Baker Donelson, as senior vice president and public policy advisor.

Mr. Jones joins The Daschle Group having worked for the U.S. Senate Select Committee on Intelligence since 2007. There he advised senior officials on matters relating to foreign affairs, national security, defense policy and intelligence oversight. During this period, Mr. Jones also worked with national and international media organizations, interest groups and other stakeholders in the context of building issue-oriented coalitions. Previously, he worked for the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI), where he provided strategic guidance and tactical support to complex international investigations. Prior to his time with the FBI, Mr. Jones served as a teacher with Teach for America.

"Dan brings experience and insight that will be invaluable to our clients as he provides first-class strategic counsel on a wide range of domestic and international matters," said Former U.S. Senator and Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle (D-SD), The Daschle Group's founder and chief executive officer. "He is an excellent addition to our group and I look forward to working with him to achieve our client objectives in the transparent, innovative and bipartisan manner of The Daschle Group."

Scott Campbell, managing shareholder of Baker Donelson's Washington, D.C. office and president of the Howard Baker Forum, said, "Dan joins a powerful team of professionals at The Daschle Group. Their partnership with Baker Donelson's bipartisan group of seasoned Washington government relations and public policy professionals is a potent combination in providing our clients with long-term strategic counsel that is essential to protecting and advancing their businesses."

About The Daschle Group

The Daschle Group, A Public Policy Advisory of Baker Donelson, is a full-service strategic advisory firm that advises clients on a broad array of economic, policy and political issues. Founded by former U.S. Senator and Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle and leading law and government affairs firm Baker Donelson, The Daschle Group is dedicated to achieving the public policy goals of its clients through creative strategies that promote transparency, flexibility and innovation. The Daschle Group works with Baker Donelson's Government Relations and Public Policy Group, founded by former Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker, continuing Senator Baker's legacy of respectful discourse, principled compromise, bipartisanship and finding practical solutions to difficult public policy challenges facing the nation.

Thanks for talking on background just now.

I'd like to use this one on the record:

"Her approach to this really is not trying to take a ruler out and measure where she wants to be on some ideological scale. It's to dive deeply into the problems facing the American people and American families, and I think she's a proud wonk and she looks at policy from that perspective."

Good luck on the bus.

July 13, 2012

Thank you for Ms. Gorman's very accurate and important article on the travesty that is happening in our community by subjecting Seniors and People with Disabilities to life-threatening delays in their medical treatment and separating them from the specialists who have been treating their complex medical conditions, sometimes for decades. I am not totally against managed-care. It could have some advantages if administered by people of goodwill. But the heartless denial of necessary exemptions is giving a black eye to the program that Governor Brown is responsible for putting forth.

The Medi-Cal managed-care program, as it has been implemented by the California Department of Healthcare Services has been anything but coordinated care. It is instead something I have likened to a "dirty bomb" on what was certainly more coordinated care before last year. This misuse of the "exemption" process is keeping people from receiving the most basic medical care.

There's a simple solution to this problem. Grant two automatic exemptions to members of this very sick population so that they continue with the specialists they have seen for many years and continue their ongoing approved medical treatments. For example, in my case, I have had two bouts of breast cancer over 18 years and I am quadriplegic. All I would need would be an exemption to see my oncologist, who I have had for 18 years, or my physiatrist who I have seen for 40 years, when I have issues that relate to cancer or quadriplegia. For the lion's share of my problems throughout the year, the colds the flu's the bladder infections, I could see a regular primary care physician. But I must see my specialists when there are problems related to my chronic conditions. That way, not only do we then reap the benefits of a coordinated care system, we don't have to waste taxpayer money on a personnel intensive process to eliminate care to tens of thousands of people who need it.

One has to wonder why no such systemic solution was implemented by Toby Douglas, the Director of the Department Of Health Care Services. He listened to legislative testimony from advocates, doctors, legal aid lawyers and the people themselves who are being denied their previously approved treatments for weeks and losing opportunities for cures. In testimony, he heard that cases like these are coming into legal aid offices at the rate of dozens a week -- and these are the people resourceful enough to make their way to legal aid. A good administrator would've jumped in and come up with a solution. I've seen the directors of other departments do just that. Yet Mr. Douglas appears unmoved. Why the Director of Health Care Services did not come up with this kind of systemic solution himself, calls into question whether he is incompetent or following instructions from the Governor to deny life preserving care to people in order to save money.

Nothing should be permitted to interrupt the approved treatments for Seniors and People with Disabilities. To get someone their chemotherapy late is to potentially kill them. Unless this is the intent of the California Department of Health Care Services, a systemic solution to this discontinuity of care must be put in place to stop this cold-blooded separation of people with complex conditions from their chronic disease specialists.

Coordinated care could work, IF people of good will put it in motion. If profit or eugenics enters into, it we must ask ourselves what we have become.

Subject: My investigation into the hell of American day care

THE NEW REPUBLIC

Dear reader,

It is one of the hardest things a parent has to do: trust your child with a complete stranger.

In my new cover story this week titled, "The Hell of American Day Care," I investigate the business of taking care of our children. And the findings are alarming.

If you want to read the entire story now, download our iPad edition here.
Also, if you subscribe today, you can get 2 issues for $2.

In the United States, despite the fact that work and family life has changed profoundly in recent decades, we lack anything resembling an actual child care system. Yes, excellent day cares are available, but only if you have the money to pay for them and the luck to secure a spot. Overall, the quality is wildly uneven and barely monitored, and at the lower end, it's Dickensian.

Even worse, the lack of quality, affordable day care is arguably the most significant barrier to full equality for women in the workplace. And it makes it more likely that children born in poverty will remain there.

There's a lot more to tell you about the business of day care, but I will give you chance to read the rest on your own.

Thanks for reading -

Forward to a Friend

Friends,

It's a busy time for all our affiliate organizations, but we want to take a step back and let you know about just some of the great work we are witnessing in our states. Since everyone has election fever these days, this snapshot focuses on election protection, voter education and our many efforts to fight voter suppression. In some states we've mounted legal fights (Wisconsin & Virginia), in most of our states we are creating and widely publishing Progressive Voter Guides, in too many of our states we are having to counter the ultra-Conservative "True the Vote" astroturfing, and in all our states we are working closely with partners and striving to ensure that elected officials uphold and enforce the law and the spirit of election protection.

Below is a snapshot, moving west to east, of the kind of work we are doing across all of our states. Please enjoy this update and please let me know how you think ProgressNow and ProgressNowEducation are doing and what we should be doing.

Forward – together!

New Mexico

ProgressNow New Mexico made national news when they released undercover video of a Republican Party poll worker (and leading Tea Party activist) training NM poll challengers to blatantly violate election law. This video shows a GOP party official instructed participants to illegally demand identification, deny translation assistance and to force some legal voters to use provisional ballots. The video went viral having reached more than 49,300 views in six days. The video was played in the lead segment on the 10/4 edition of "Politics Nation with Al Sharpton" on MSNBC, earned a front-page Op-Ed in the HuffingtonPost from Ambassador Joe Wilson, front page stories on Salon.com (here and here), ThinkProgress (here and here) and The Nation where Congressman Steve Pearce (R-NM) was quoted as saying he was aware of and sanctioned the illegal tactics as the way Republicans would win back the state. ProgressNowNM later returned to the training and found the state True The Vote director teaching the Republican-party training (a violation of IRS rules). On day 5 of the story, New Mexico's Attorney General announced an official investigation into voter suppression, calling it a "concerted effort to discourage some voters." Though the story continues to develop, to date more than 80 news stories about ProgressNowNM's voter suppression expose have been tracked. Not bad for a new state, a determined team and a used video camera.

Colorado

Colorado's current Secretary of State (SOS), Scott Gessler, is the most partisan person to hold that office. As an Elections Attorney who built his career on helping conservative special interests get around election law, we knew we had to take him seriously as soon as he took office. ProgressNow Colorado, along with several partners, built a long-term plan to brand Gessler and consistently hold him accountable for his actions. This 18 month plan which includes legal, earned and social media, public education, and surrogate development, has held Gessler back from his weekly attempts to put unnecessary obstacles in front of voters. This long-term plan has directly resulted in consistent, negative, and truthful coverage of Gessler's activities.

As we approach the election, ProgressNow Colorado has plans to counter Gessler's friends at True the Vote with "voting heroes" who will have the back of anyone whose ballot is challenged. ProgressNow Colorado is also currently working with local and national press to ensure they are aware of potential last-minute games that Gessler could play between now and certification of the election. Our team will be live-blogging any instances of voter intimidation to ensure the issue brought into the public sphere. All of this will be done with a keen eye toward empowering voters - not making them afraid of turning out.

Michigan

Progress Michigan is working hand-in-hand with the Michigan Election Coalition on a number of different voter protection angles. They are aggressively pushing back on the Secretary of State's citizenship checkbox, which requires every voter to affirm citizenship before they are giving a ballot. The bill was vetoed by Gov. Snyder, but the SOS is still putting the checkbox on ballots anyway (although she won't deny ballots to people who refuse to sign). Progress Michigan helped place op-eds, push out statements, etc. They are also heavily promoting the 866-OUR-VOTE hotline with earned and paid media and the recently past voter registration deadline with local media events.

Ohio

ProgressOhio will utilize a multi-faceted strategy to engage, educate and empower voters across Ohio to participate in the November 6th general election. ProgressOhio will employ every method and tool at their disposal (numerous email reminders, aggressively publishing the election protection Hotline number, a one-stop-shop website resource development for partners, media training on messaging and rapid response mechanisms to ensure maximum media exposure, production and dissemination of a "How to Vote" video, Secretary of State outreach and relationship maintenance (will also allow us to have direct access to the Ohio Secretary of State office on Election Day should problems arise in Ohio), Poll Monitor recruitment - heavily relying in pastors and ministerial alliances, continuous and aggressive outreach to traditional media and social media.

Virginia

ProgressVA continues to staff the communications needs for Virginia's election protection coalition. Over the past month, ProgressVA has worked to increase coverage of grassroots voter registration and education efforts, with a particular emphasis on story placement in college campus media. Additionally, they've also been reviewing public records requests seeking information on True the Vote, and their Virginia affiliate, Virginia Voter's Alliance, communications with the State Board of Elections and local registrars. All this voter protection work has been done with an eye towards January, when we expect to face several bills seeking to restrict voter registration and participation. They're laying the groundwork now to be able to point to valuable, legal, and effective grassroots civic engagement work when the time comes to help combat the false voter fraud narrative. Basically, they are winning the future - now.

New Hampshire

Over the past two years Granite State Progress & Granite State Progress Education Fund has participated in an Election Law Coalition convened by America Votes to help fight voter suppression legislation in New Hampshire. This has included public education, legislative testimony and hard-hitting media communications. With the election just around the corner, Granite State Progress have teamed up with America Votes and the New Hampshire Citizens Alliance (NHCA) to create and publicize an election protection and voter education website to empower citizens with the ability to have their vote counted.

This year a new state law in New Hampshire requires voters to present photo identification or sign an affidavit before casting a ballot. The September 11th State Primary was supposed to be a test run of the system, but it was a complete failure as voters were turned away from the polls. This heightens concerns for the November election. We are currently in the process of adding materials so that the website can go live the week of October 8.

The website will contain:

- Information on how to contact a voter protection hotline maintained by NHCA Voter education materials (recent court decisions, handouts, fact sheets, posters, and brochures) by the ACLU, LWV, NHCA and America Votes Information on where to vote, voting absentee, and registering to vote PSA videos covering different demographics in English and Spanish, possibly French, produced by Granite State Progress & Education Fund;
- a media center where all clips regarding the election will be made easily available for voters and journalists alike; and,

10/18/2016

- a Twitter feed with hash tags of interest.

Subject: Turn Up the Heat on FOX News

Friend,

The heat wave most of us are experiencing this week is a continuation of weather extremes we've seen in many parts of the country this year. As Mother Jones noted, "We're seeing records fall in all directions this year -- wettest, driest, warmest, coldest, snowiest, stormiest, fieriest -- across the globe."<sup>1</sup>

While no particular weather event can be blamed on global warming, science has shown that global warming is indeed contributing to the changes in weather and temperatures that we're experiencing.

But you wouldn't know that if you watched FOX News.

According to a Media Matters for America report, Fox News has not mentioned human-induced climate change or global warming while reporting on or discussing the current heat wave at all over the past week.<sup>2</sup>

Turn up the heat on FOX News. Click here to e-mail the network and tell them to stop promoting an anti-climate agenda and start providing accurate coverage of the climate crisis.

Apparently FOX News only discusses global warming when it helps to advance the network's climate science misinformation agenda.

For example, during the February 2010 blizzard, FOX News personalities like Sean Hannity, Glenn Beck and others seized on the storm to mock Al Gore and climate science.<sup>3</sup> And as you may remember, that same winter, FOX News Washington managing editor Bill Sammon ordered his staff to cast doubt on climate science.<sup>4</sup> Additionally, FOX News also aggressively promoted the bogus climate-gate scandal.<sup>5</sup>

Turn up the heat on FOX News. Click here to e-mail the network and tell them to stop promoting an anti-climate agenda and start providing accurate coverage of the climate crisis.

Across the globe, scientists have predicted that unmitigated climate change would cause more extreme weather events, including more severe heat waves, more intense droughts and stronger deluges. Al Gore talked about this in his recent essay for Rolling Stone:

"These extreme events are happening in real time. It is not uncommon for the nightly newscast to resemble a nature hike through the Book of Revelation. Yet most of the news media completely ignore how such events are connected to the climate crisis, or dismiss the connection as controversial."<sup>6</sup>

There's no doubt that FOX News is the biggest source of climate misinformation amongst a news media that, as a whole, is largely failing to provide solid coverage of the climate crisis and its impacts. In order to mobilize public support for strong climate action, we need to fight back against climate smears in the news media -- and that starts with not letting FOX News' anti-climate agenda go unchallenged. Click here to send an e-mail to FOX News.

Thank you,

Mike Palamuso
Vice President, Communications
League of Conservation Voters

P.S. Intense heat waves can be dangerous, so please be safe. Remember to stay cool, stay hydrated and take appropriate precautions when going outdoors.

My apologies, but the original version I submitted at deadline had a font change in the footnotes I noticed after submitting.

I didn't change anything else in the paper, but if you would like a more aesthetically pleasing one footnote wise please see the attached.

Thank you again for such a memorable seminar.

Hi John,

Well, I know you had a good weekend! We've been working with the campaign folks to reschedule my interview with Secretary Clinton. I wanted to write you about some of the metrics that we are getting and let you know through placement on Facebook we can guarantee 1.5 million views in addition to Yahoo engagement which has been close to 1 million for my political interviews. I'd also like to do a separate piece of business through social media along the lines of "10 things you don't know about Hillary Clinton" that would showcase her personality and has a lot of viral potential. I know there is a lot of demands on her time, but we have been waiting patiently to schedule something and I'm sure we've been driving the campaign staff crazy, but the reach and engagement will be significant and I'm very much looking forward to having the opportunity to talk to her. I have been assured the campaign wants this as well. Can you help make this happen? I'd really appreciate your help.

Thanks, John. Look forward to hearing from you.

Best,

Katie

Subject: [big campaign] NRO's Judicial Attack Dog Calls Elena Kagan A Prostitute

FYI - Ethics and Public Policy Center president (and NRO contributor) Ed Whelan is likely to be one of the main attackers of whoever Obama nominates. It would be helpful to preemptively marginalize him a bit, so we just sent this out.

<http://mediamatters.org/press/releases/201005090009>

NRO's Judicial Attack Dog Calls Elena Kagan A Prostitute

For Immediate Release
May 9, 2010

Burns: "Imagine the rightwing firestorm that would erupt if a prominent progressive insisted Sarah Palin was selling her body. This should be no different."

WASHINGTON, D.C. - Media Matters President Eric Burns released the following statement after Ethics and Public Policy Center president Ed Whelan implied possible Supreme Court nominee Elena Kagan is a prostitute :

"Ed Whelan's appalling attack on Elena Kagan degrades the political discourse and women everywhere.

"It is disgusting, yet not surprising, that the conservatives' favorite judicial attack dog would stoop so low as to imply a woman is a prostitute merely because she didn't to allow her personal views to stand in the way of our military's recruiters.

"Imagine the rightwing firestorm that would erupt if a prominent progressive insisted Sarah Palin was selling her body. This should be no different.

"Conservatives should stand up to Whelan, demand he apologize, and refuse to parrot his imminent attacks against whoever the president nominates to the bench."

Background:

Ed Whelan, a former law clerk to Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia, is at the forefront of the fight against President Obama's judicial nominees. Writing at National Review Online on May 7, 2010, Whelan attacked Kagan for allowing military recruiters at Harvard Law despite her opposition to "Don't Ask, Don't Tell."

Whelan wrote :

But, as George Bernard Shaw would have said to Kagan for selling out her supposedly deeply held principles, "We've already established what you are, ma'am. Now we're just haggling over the price."

Fearing the backlash he deserves, Whelan updated his post today to claim his use of the Shaw quote "obviously doesn't carry (and in my case certainly wasn't intended to carry) the particular stigma that a narrowly literal understanding would convey."

That's too little, too late.

Subject: Too Crazy for Colorado

 ProgressNow Colorado

Dear Neighbor,

What would you say about a man who thinks you should vote for him because he “doesn’t wear high heels?” What would you say about a man who endorsed a radical abortion ban, and says he even opposes a woman’s right to choose if she is raped? What would you say about a man who believes Social Security should be run by Wall Street, and the Department of Education should be abolished?

You’d say he’s crazy. And you’d say he’s too crazy for Colorado. But all of these extreme right-wing ideas, and more, are the words of Weld County District Attorney Ken Buck.

There has never been a more critical time to fight for the basic values we as progressives can all agree on. There has not been a more fundamental crossroads than what

Colorado faces this fall. And we need your help to hold Ken Buck accountable for his radical views—before it’s too late. Please join the fight with your donation of \$50 or more to ProgressNow Colorado.

<http://progressnowcolorado.org/StandUpToTheFringe>

Yesterday, a coalition of progressive organizations held a news conference outlining some of the reasons why Ken Buck is too crazy for Colorado. Here’s an excerpt from the Associated Press story on our event:

The coalition — dubbed the Campaign for Strong Colorado — included Planned Parenthood and ProgressNow Colorado, and it planned to use comments Buck made in his primary campaign against him. Early ammunition included Buck’s opposition to abortion rights, even in cases of rape and incest, and Buck’s argument for deep cuts to the federal departments of Education and Energy. Buck has called for completely cutting off funding for the U.S. Postal Service and Amtrak.

“How can he represent what Colorado’s all about and say these crazy things?” said Ellen Dumm, executive director of the group.

The answer is simple: he doesn’t. And we have a chance now to make sure every Colorado citizen gets the word about Buck, and hold him accountable for an agenda that would harm our state for years to come. The choice has never been clearer, and there’s no time to lose.

<http://progressnowcolorado.org/StandUpToTheFringe>

Thank you. It is times like these when what we have done here at ProgressNow Colorado since 2003 matters most. And working together, we’re going to show the whole country that Coloradans still value what Buck wants to destroy: they are the things that matter most.

Sincerely,

Kjersten Forseth

In 2006, we taped a THIS IS AMERICA roundtable with the topic, ON BEING AN AMERICAN.

Here is the program description:

Join host Dennis Wholey for the first of two roundtable discussions of "what it means to be an American". Mona Charen, Syndicated Columnist; Reg Weaver, National Education Association President; Janet Murguia, President and CEO of The National Council of La Raza; John Podesta, President and CEO of The Center of American Progress and former chief of staff for President Bill Clinton; Kenji Yoshino, Professor and Dean at Yale Law School; and Associate Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia, celebrating his twentieth year in the Supreme Court, share a lively conversation about what it means to be an American, what their own American experiences have been, and what our collective identities as Americans are.

Producer Jake Cregger and I are debating offering this as two half-hour programs over the next couple of weeks.

March 4, 2016

I wanted you to get my resume and positive message of a letter from Tiernan first. This outlines my difficulties in getting advice for Project Management openings that are entry-level or use my less than 3 office years of work in the field ( you can add some self-directed research and writing for Professional Development Units.) Kendall Lott will want you to keep his name confidential yet I will use it in a memo to the Obama Cabinet next week to say if there is no job placement by then, I may start a case for federal government involvement in a mandatory new job training program for me related to my education and experience. M Powered Strategies did not offer me an interview when I applied for their jobs including one of the few apprenticeship programs in Project Management in D.C.. This is the last March 4 e-mail.

Please take care of M Powered Strategies' interests on a response, if they want one. Jimmy Church gave me mixed signals on wanting to communicate with me and yesterday he sent me an e-mail indicating he did not want to give me pro bono services on professional development. I need to discontinue my overtures to Jimmy. On August 4 he indicated it was fine if I contacted you. Thanks.

INTRODUCTION TO CUSTOMER CARE FOR PROJECT MANAGEMENT INSTITUTE, NEWTOWN SQUARE, PENNSYLVANIA
At: customercare@pmi.org

I am informing Customer Care that I need to invoke principles in Section 3.1 of the Project Management Institute Code of Ethics 3.1 of Respect with a "high regard for ourselves, others, and resources entrusted to us" including "money, reputation" to cause an atmosphere of "trust, confidence, and performance excellence." I believe Georgetown was wrong to set Human Resources policies where an October 2010 Georgetown website entry of its Vice President Linda Greenan indicated to me Georgetown gave preferential career mentoring to recipients of Project Empowerment funds from the D.C. Dept. of Employment Services that also sponsored my stay on a federal Workforce Investment Act grant: I will try to omit racial issues and merely say one factor was that D.C. Dept. of Employment Services paid Georgetown subsidies to hire 2 Project Empowerment graduates where no subsidy was offered for my hiring, only a grant to pay for tuition, and I was not hired at Georgetown.

I increased criticism of both Monica West at DOES and today Rachel Finer of Georgetown for not giving me adequate career advice considering the resources entrusted to them since both used lists of jobs where the vast majority wanted 5 or more years of high tech experience I did not have (on a DOES website since they did not do individual lists, and also CCPE lists.) Rachel is not a PMP and she left Georgetown. I need to caution any PMP's who are involved in my situation, especially Edwin Schmierer, that since while I am pleased with his 2012 agreement with me to continue using Georgetown's campus, there were many deficiencies in advising me on a new job training program or educational venture since I am still unemployed ever since I completed the Georgetown Certificate in Project Management in Feb. 2011 and this is not excellent, this is bad for performance standards in 20 CFR 666.100, U.S. Department of Labor Employment Training Administration, for my Workforce Investment Act grant since the U.S. Dept. of Labor gave DOES the funds: these include conversations after e-mails that I had with Georgetown officials who vaguely told me to see the D.C. government for another job training program and refusing to help get a list of part-time, lower paying jobs with Georgetown support to help meet U.S. Dept. of Labor standards to gain my hiring: this is because a Georgetown graduate, Vincent Orange, on City Council released figures in Feb. 2015 that in 2013, among a set of schools that had programs both in 2013 and Feb. 2015, Mayor Vincent Gray's administration only placed 127 of 383 who completed the Title I WIA program: I mistrust the process where the U.S. Dept. of Justice dropped charges or said they would not prosecute Mayor Gray after a news report said they asked Gray for a guilty plea in September 2014.. This is also addressed to Mayor Bowser and the memo describes numerous delays where I still have not been placed in a new D.C. job training program despite the fact I had zero income in 2014 and zero income in 2015 with only $140 in the bank today: I can also not afford transcripts to get another choice besides DePaul University in Chicago, where I was accepted for undergrad yet I am uncertain of getting private loans: I can get federal student loans since Sept. 16, 2014.

Thanks to the Clinton Foundation for receiving my messages.

SUMMARY FOR PROJECT MANAGEMENT NEWSLETTER FORMAT - TOOLS AND TECHNIQUES MARKETING - DECISIONS AND LISTS

1. I narrowly stay in - decline to resign Project Management job search: main reasons include ability to fill out a Healthcare Analyst Job application at Booz Allen Hamilton with more than 6 months Medicaid government staff work in Illinois (have year), ability to get National Opinion Research Center job interview in Chicago from Georgetown job fair yet it was postponed due to lack of negotiations on housing, and ability to get an A test grade from my former employer for Administrative Assistant duties at Illinois Dept. of Human Services, Ill. Dept. of Central Management Services (where I was Medicaid caseworker for 5 nursing homes) Oct. 1, 2013 - Sept. 30, 2014 - yet I was not interviewed because I did not move from Washington, D.C. to Illinois: I will keep another reason private since I send this to Hillary Clinton at Clinton Foundation yet I should not discuss one issue due to her campaign.

NOTE ON PMIWDC JOB LISTS: You will find a "Thank You" note in the text yet please note I could only find one entry-level job I could apply for on early pages of the PMIWDC Job list, Language Doctors with proofreading. I am not sure where PMIWDC got list opening at D.C. State Superintendent of Education yet I did not fulfill requirement of 6 years early childhood grants work: I could not apply for it.

2. Qualified for 0 of 9 Project Management jobs posted by D.C. Department of Human Resources

MAIN EXAMPLES OF LISTINGS:

Policy Advisor, Deputy Mayor for Education, $93,000 per year: have graduate degree in public policy (International Affairs is a Political Science degree; and I had several Education classes at DePaul where I got my Master's Degree in History. I know about the required performance area. I fell short on the requirement for extensive advanced data analysis. I note a B.A. plus 6 years work experience is preferred.

Community Service Program Representative, No, 3 years related work experience

Associate Director of Collections at Library, no - 6 years collection experience

Skip Deputy Director: title too high

Supy - Contract Specialist $107,000 per year : I'm willing to work in its area of contracting and procurement, My education is fine since I have required B.A. and also preferred Master's: yet I could not apply with lack of 4 years work experience

3. Qualified for 0 of 5 Project Management jobs posted by D.C. Public Schools

SUMMARY: Kaya Henderson's Central Management Services simply does not want to hire anyone with my past experience: her choices were not in common with my past work and I was forbidden from applying:

CHIEF OPERATING OFFICER: Director of Security,, No (means I cannot apply), 7-9 years of related experience and Coordinator, Facility Initiatives No, 2-4 years of construction renovation

TEACHING AND LEARNING

Manager, Communications and Education Supports, No 4-6 years of managing related programs

Manager, Speech Language pathology - No, need license in it

Analyst, Quality Assurance, No 1 year system design

Note: I only did work in one of these five areas, education, yet it was in Government Relations for 1 year and not management of a communications program.

LISTS

4. Made unilateral decision to use Washington Peace Center job list recommended to me by office of Andria Wisler at Georgetown Center for Social Justice, Research, and Teaching: it improved chances with only requiring B.A., not Project Management, and adding good labor union and one Lobbyist Assistant job: yet I still have complaints Georgetown CCPE did not give me proper job lists 2011-2014 with too many Maryland, Virginia high-tech companies with 5 or more years high-tech experience I don't have

5. To add to list of companies with offices in both Chicago and Washington, D.C.: Mayor Bowser could favor this with more pro-Chicago policies on Exelon-Pepco merger, her hiring of Chicago native attorney, and my 47 years in Illinois

6. MY DOES CASEWORKER CARA SHOCKLEY RESIGNED, OR SAID SHE NO LONGER SERVES: Cara Shockley was recently on a medical leave and told me she no longer serves as an Employment Specialist so she could no longer serve as my caseworker: FOR EDWIN SCHMIERER: Talks with him, Walter Rankin, and other Georgetown staff indicated a desire for me to ask D.C. government to assist in selection of my next job training program rather than Georgetown after Georgetown quit WIA; I have mixed feelings and cannot entirely release Georgetown from advising responsibility as a graduate and Workforce Investment Act grant recipient under Obama Administration guidelines for the long-term unemployed; CARA'S MAIN IDEA WAS MY USE OF THE IDEALIST LIST: It greatly increased the amount of entry-level Project Management jobs to about 8 a week and I applied for many and got no interviews: they were mainly nonprofit organizations who usually want some knowledge of their group or internships like I had at Columbia University in the 1980's with Center for Inter-American Relations, International Peace Academy (where Jeff Helsing, today at U.S. Institute of Peace, was also an intern), and United Nations Association of the U.S.A. where I was Assistant Editor during a summer Baruch Fellowship like an internship. Cara seemed to admire the Georgetown Nonprofit Management program,. probably a Fenty-era Workforce Investment Act client, yet Mayor Bowser should know Georgetown never offered me an internship among internships it has: and it was to my detriment in the job market.

I CONTINUE TO ASK EDWIN , SCS TO CLARIFY PROJECT MANAGEMENT GOALS: Since President Obama's rules still allow me to market my Georgetown Certificate in Project Management, this list of website goals was also around in Rachel Finer's time and it consisted an informal list for expectation for a marketing plan for recipients of the Workforce Investment Act grant in Georgetown Project Management: it said: Project Managers are sought after in "professions including:

- Management consulting
- Information technology
- Construction management
- Government contracting and procurement
- Healthcare

(I mostly skipped jobs in) - Law and litigation support (only tried for 2 Law School jobs lately, few immigration paralegal jobs)

- Nonprofit management
- Public relations"

It seemed Rachel did not introduce me to employers in most of these categories and only sent me to one session with Mike Schaub's Career Office in October 2011 with only Booz Allen Hamilton and Deloitte: lists from CCPE were mostly high-tech or information technology where I have more expertise in government and then nonprofits and public relations with classwork. This list is very diffuse and if Georgetown wants future work with D.C., D.C. government needs marketing plans. I would like to ask the Clinton Foundation to consider contacting Edwin since these lists of interests are still important in marketing my past work and I ask the Clinton Foundation to help in choosing a new job training program or classes that are somewhat related to these goals. Readers of this memo should understand there is a Clinton Global Initiative and it has some connections with businesses and providers of job training including the Chicago area.

MAYOR BOWSER'S ACTIONS

1. Only responded early to my resume when I sent it to Mayor's Office of Talent and Appointments or MOTA: her office never called me in for an interview and I was able to apply for Project Management work where she did not set specific qualifications, only duties that I could perform. MOTA does include her top-level appointments where she can prefer many years of experience.
2. Did not respond when I asked for a grant for both a Project Management Institute membership and Mentoring program fee: however, I do fault her office for not favoring my mentoring: I needed to change the focus of my job search or pick new classes and when neither happened, I could only apply for a few Project Management jobs and got zero income in 2015: also did not get waiver of 2-year time limit after my 2011 graduation when I asked in May 2015 to enter the Capital City Fellows Program, my best choice to apply with two Master's Degrees in D.C. Government.
3. Asked to reconsider and respond to e-mails about the Clinton Foundation with economic development strategies and links to job trainers..
4. On my side, after we already have federal performance standard difficulties with my not getting a job placement after the Workforce Investment Act paid for my Georgetown Certificate in Project Management (and a goal of U.S. Dept. of Labor in 20 CFR 666.100 was not fulfilled), I could not apply for nearly all of the remaining Workforce Investment Act program in Feb. 2015 when Vincent Orange announced Mayor Gray only placed 127 of 383 Title I WIA completers in 2013, and the only choice where the amount of placements was high enough, Opportunities Industrialization Center in Ward 8 for Customer Service, could have neighborhood tensions or criticisms of the area near 640 Massachusetts Av. where Georgetown did not help me get a job placement
5. I tried to resolve this when Mayor Bowser's new LEAP Academy invited me to apply for a Customer Service program in October and classes started in November: this was after I asked for removal of another DOES ex-caseworker, Monica West, for telling me earlier that I could not apply to LEAP because I was not in TANF: There was no rejection yet I was not invited to November classes. This worsens my crisis on not selecting a new job training program since my only recommendation from my past labor union, Communications Workers of America, was for Customer Service with my 78% test grade.

PLEASE NOTE: I WILL APPLY AGAIN TO SENIOR CITIZEN COMMUNITY SERVICE JOBS PROGRAM after a runaround from Mayor Gray's administration when they gave me the wrong phone number for National Black Caucus for the Aged in 2013 when I asked to apply for it: it hires workers over 55 and can include someone like myself who did not get a placement after a WIA program

I NEED INDIVIDUALIZED ATTENTION TO MY JOB SEARCH FROM D.C. WITH A SKILLS ASSESSMENT AND NEW IDEAS.
THANKS TO PROJECT MANAGEMENT INSTITUTE OF WASHINGTON, D.C. FOR FREE JOB LISTING AND PM SERVICES DIRECTORY

I was pleased to see PMIWDC lists a variety of training and preparation courses with free events with thought leaders. Thanks to PMO Strategies for offering work on coaching and training with use of sponsor and stakeholder: my Workforce Investment Act program stakeholder, U.S. Secretary of Labor Tom Perez, was vague and he did not give a specific response when I asked for intensive job coaching other than to say his department offers it in Anne Arundel County, Maryland not D.C.. Thanks to M Powered Strategies for offering to discuss professional development and facilitation (though they may charge money and I only want pro bono work on my advising.). I note MPS Assists at M Powered Strategies has links for pro bono discussions of the United Nations and climate change: some of you may like to learn about my Sierra Club testimony to the Environmental Protection Agency in favor of President Obama's Clean Power Plan on the climate change issue. President Kendall Lott's leadership of M Powered Strategies is innovative and led to establishment of the only Apprentice Program Analyst program with 25 weeks of paid on-the-job training that I know of in the Washington, D.C. metropolitan area. I WAS PLEASED TO SEE MAYOR BOWSER'S COMMUNITY RELATIONS NEWSLETTER FROM FRANK MADURO AND SETH SHAPIRO: This was a sign of major progress in communications since I accepted Mayor Bowser's invitation to attend her Dec. 9 holiday party. It includes information on new leaders who could have a fresh perspective on my situation. These include Deputy Mayor of Greater Economic Opportunity Courtney Snowden who wants to visit Ward 6. I resided in Chicago many years and I especially welcomed the appointment of Judah Gluckman as Deputy Director of Mayor Bowser's Office of Public Private Partnerships: before fine work at the D.C. City Council on the economy and policy for Mayor Bowser, Judah worked on the staff of Mayor Richard M. Daley of Chicago in 2003-2004 when he worked on a B.A. in Policy Studies from the University of Chicago. Judah has a law degree from American University in D.C.. I still want and wanted to connect with pro-Obama Democrats in Chicago and the University of Chicago with offices in both Chicago near an Institute for Politics and D.C.. I note Judah Gluckman has a LinkedIn entry where he wants his new Office of Public Private Partnerships to work on "projects" like "infrastructure": He could improve information for me about current Project Management work in D.C.. I also favor Mayor Bowser's work on the Exelon-Pepco merger and told her a friend from my Young Democrats of Cook County years, Marlow Colvin is the Vice President for Government Relations at Commonwealth Edison in Chicago.

PLEASE SEE MANY FACEBOOK POSTINGS PRESIDENT OBAMA SENT ME: A POTENTIAL PORTFOLIO IS A MAJOR REASON TO ASK

FOR COMMUNICATIONS PROJECT MANAGEMENT TRAINING

I want to tell the Clinton Foundation I asked President Obama for near-intervention and his comments on making one of these decisions: for me to enter an Apprentice Facilitator program for 25 weeks or Communications Project Management for social media or enter an entirely new education or worker retraining program. I was accepted for a Bachelor's Degree in Business program at DePaul starting on Sept.. 15. I also said incentives should be made for Mayor Emanuel since on LinkedIn surveys since 2012 I got a higher rate of response from the Chicago area Democrats, about 126, in contrast to only 26 in D.C. I believe the social media compromise could preserve gains of knowledge I gained from my Georgetown Certificate in Project Management program with a Workforce Investment Act grant in 2011: yet the outlook is uncertain since I was unemployed since then. NOTE FOR THE CLINTON FOUNDATION: I have concerns when pro-Obama Democrats often send me Facebook postings on a volunteer basis and requests for campaign and financial contributions yet their offices did not seem to tune into my need for paid employment from Democratic Party contacts or high desirability of a paid social media role for me. I also get e-mails from the White House Historical Association yet I need a mentor or mediator to explore today's market with my M.A. in History

I was pleased to attend Mayor Bowser's holiday party yesterday. Her Community Relations office sent me an interesting newsletter today with success stories among her appointees like Judah Gluckman, who worked for Mayor Daley at one time and now works on public-private partnerships like infrastructure, and Courtney Snowden, Deputy Mayor for Economic Development. I continue to tell Mayor Bowser and PMIWDC I need a mentoring program because direction of this effort both from Mayor Gray's appointees and Rachel Finer at Georgetown was too uncertain. Both referred me to Project Management lists where most jobs required more than 5 years of high-tech experience I don't have. I only had one good year of D.C. Dept. of Human Resources job listings in 2012 with 5 choices: Project Management: 2 jobs 20024 and 20034 in Health Care Finance for $85,000 per year where I could qualify with my one year of Medicaid experience in Illinois; and 1 job on Race to the Top with a similar salary where I could use my one year in Government Relations at Columbia and other Human Resources: Procurement for $49,000 with zero to three years Procurement (definitely related to Project Management); Staff Assistant at $50,000 Other choices were not too good from D.C. government between 2011 and 2014 except 2 good choices from D.C. Public Schools : Intergovernmental Relations Specialist where I was turned down; and Project Coordinator that was never filled. . My marketing by D.C. DOES and Georgetown did not concentrate on the goal of getting me a job where I claim not more than 3 years of Project Management experience including self-directed research of my writing on the United Nations and history thesis. When I did not get any of those 3 jobs, my prospects worsened.

This week, it is very bleak: I qualify for zero of the 9 Project Management jobs on the D.C. Dept. of Human Resources list and none of the 5 Project Management jobs on the D.C. Public Schools list. Yet I am learning from LinkedIn releases on the Project Manager's Network a typical Project Manager would have more respect for the stakeholder's goals of the U.S. Dept. of Labor Employment Training Administration for me to get a job after the WIA grant: Daphne Keys says in 3 Keys to Finding Satisfying Job: personal values of 1. Emotional Intelligence 2. Employee Happiness and 3. Social Factor: most jobs are referred internally or by personal connections: I need to tell Edwin Schmierer I disagreed with Georgetown Human Resources' lack of posting entry-level Project Coordinator jobs and handling my situation like a wealthy Virginian when Linda Greenan felt it was more important to hire Project Empowerment participants with subsidized salaries from DOES. It was wise when LinkedIn tried to refer me to Governor Pat Quinn's managers in Illinois and I tell the Clinton Foundation I had doubts when the Obama Administration did not answer my inquiry in November 2012 for an Illinois appointment after my 47 years there when I had a good reference from Tiernan Reilly in his campaign before June 2013 and then he moved to Ireland. I approached Georgetown's community partner Catholic Charities with only one job bulletin to me since Sept. 17 telling me to contact D.C. government with an ad for a police investigator position I'm not qualified for. Paul White on Project Manager's Network on Nov. 15 talked about when should one quit a job: "enough is enough" if an organization is not functioning properly or achieving its goals or having a positive impact: I have similar feelings when I need to ask Georgetown to consider other options than referring me back to D.C. government after in Feb. 2015 we learned Mayor Gray only placed 127 of 383 Title I Workforce Investment Act recipients in 2013, less than 33%.

MAIN GOAL

Please give me any suggestions for a new worker retraining program with less scope than Project Management, my third choice after runarounds including irresponsible D.C. delays after Strayer accepted me in a worker training program in Accounting where the Workforce Investment Act promised funds yet D.C. did not process it on time.

PLEASE NOTE: I WOULD BE HAPPY TO REVISE THIS AT ANOTHER TIME YET MY RECORDS INDICATE YESTERDAY'S MESSAGES DID NOT GO THROUGH AND I NEED TO SEND THEM AGAIN

Subject: October 5 Book Party for Sperling-WInthrop's "What Works in Girls Education:Evidence for the World's Best Investment"

Friends:

I just wanted to make sure that you got the invite for our book party Monday, October 5 on "What Works in Girls Education: Evidence for the World's Best Investment" that Rebecca Winthrop and myself co-authored. Rebecca is the current director of the Center of Universal Education (CUE) at Brookings Institution, which I founded and was the first director of from 2002-2008. The CUE focuses on policies for education for all children in poor and conflict-impacted nations around the world. We were very fortunate to have Nobel Peace Prize winner Malala write the foreword for our book.

I know how busy all of our friends are with work and family, so totally understand if you cannot make it, but I wanted to make sure you did get the invitation and knew about the book in case it is of interest. Michele Jolin is hosting at her house tomorrow night at 6pm and it will also celebrate a book chapter on bipartisan international development by Raj Shah and Michael Gerson.

The information is below.
Take care,
Gene

We hope that you will join our upcoming book party on Monday October 5th from 6:00 - 8:00 pm to celebrate the exploration of what works in international education and foreign assistance. Gene Sperling, Rebecca Winthrop, Michael Gerson & Raj Shah will briefly discuss their new publications.

The party will take place at the home of Michele Jolin and Kevin Downey at 3440 34th Place NW, Washington, DC 20016. We hope to see you there!

Please RSVP to miles@results4america.org

Subject: regular meetings?

1) Several people have suggested doing daily or twice-weekly meetings of senior staff so everyone knows where things stand. This would include departmental heads like agency review, personnel, and policy who aren't on our communications calls.

2) Should we schedule a board conference call this Friday, perhaps at 10 or 10:30 so it's after our 9:30 a.m. communications call?

Let me know what you think about both of these. Thanks.

GOVERNOR MAGGIE HASSAN

Governor Maggie Hassan was sworn in as the 81st Governor of New Hampshire on January 3, 2013. Governor Hassan is focused on bringing people together to build a stronger, more innovative New Hampshire, with more good jobs that can support a growing middle class and where all of New Hampshire's citizens are included in New Hampshire's success and prosperity.

Working with legislators from both parties, the Governor successfully led efforts to develop and pass a fiscally responsible, balanced budget that protects New Hampshire's priorities, without an income or sales tax.

She has moved forward with implementing her "Innovate NH" jobs plan, seeking to build the best workforce in the country and strengthen the economy by freezing in-state tuition at public colleges and universities and restoring scholarship funding, doubling and making permanent the state's research and development tax credit, and providing businesses with technical assistance to help them create jobs.

Governor Hassan has worked to maintain New Hampshire's high quality of life as one of the safest, healthiest and most livable states in the nation. She successfully worked to invest in a stronger mental health system, put more State Troopers on the road, restore the Children in Need of Services program, fully fund the waitlists for services for people with acquired brain disorders and developmental disabilities, and restore funding for the Land and Community Heritage Investment Program.

Governor Hassan began her career in public service in 1999 when Governor Jeanne Shaheen asked her to serve on the Advisory Committee to the Adequacy in Education and Finance Commission. Her experience as a business attorney, along with her role as the parent of two children, one of whom experiences severe disabilities, enabled her to provide a unique perspective as the commission did its work.

In 2004, Governor Hassan was first elected to the New Hampshire Senate, serving the people of the 23rd District, which included numerous Seacoast towns. During her six years in office, she was selected by her colleagues to serve as both President Pro Tempore and Majority Leader of the State Senate.

As a leader in the Senate, she helped pass universal kindergarten; worked to pass New Hampshire Working, a nationally recognized effort to help businesses and workers during the recession; sponsored the Regional Greenhouse Gas Initiative to reduce long-term energy costs, curb pollution, and create jobs; and was instrumental in passing marriage equality in New Hampshire.

The Governor earned her B.A. from Brown University and her J.D. from the Northeastern School of Law. Governor Hassan and her husband, Tom, the principal of Phillips Exeter Academy, are the proud parents of two children.

Dear Trustees,

You may recall that a group of Black alumni have been in communication with the College since the post-Ferguson campus activism began last year. At the conclusion of the February Board meeting a group of administrators and Trustees met with two representatives of the group for a very productive conversation that touched on advocacy for students and other opportunities for Black alumni to re-engage with the College. The alumni group has been working actively on both fronts since then under the name Black Alumni Network, and three members will be coming to campus June 6 to continue the dialogue.

A special meeting of the Advancement, Academic Affairs and Campus Life & Athletics will be held at 2 pm Saturday June 6 for Trustee committee members who are still in attendance. Any Trustees who are not members of those committees are also invited to attend. At this meeting the Black Alumni Network will be sharing their ideas for re-engaging Black alumni with the College in various capacities. Beverly and Carol have met with them and are very excited by the possibilities that this group offers for a more inclusive alumni affairs program. I hope you can join us for what promises to be a very important next step in our strategic plan to engage our vibrant and diverse alumni community.

Best,

Teresa

Tech giants don't want Obama to give police access to encrypted phone data

Tech behemoths including Apple and Google and leading cryptologists are urging President Obama to reject any government proposal that alters the security of smartphones and other communications devices so that law enforcement can view decrypted data.

In a letter to be sent Tuesday and obtained by The Washington Post, a coalition of tech firms, security experts and others appeal to the White House to protect privacy rights as it considers how to address law enforcement's need to access data that is increasingly encrypted.

"Strong encryption is the cornerstone of the modern information economy's security," said the letter, signed by more than 140 tech companies, prominent technologists and civil society groups.

The letter comes as senior law enforcement officials warn about the threat to public safety from a loss of access to data and communications. Apple and Google last year announced they were offering forms of smartphone encryption so secure that even law enforcement agencies could not gain access — even with a warrant.

"There's no doubt that all of us should care passionately about privacy, but we should also care passionately about protecting innocent people," FBI Director James B. Comey said at a recent roundtable with reporters.

Last fall, after the announcements by Apple and Google, Comey said he could not understand why companies would "market something expressly to allow people to place themselves beyond the law."

FBI and Justice Department officials say they support the use of encryption but want a way for officials to get the lawful access they need.

Many technologists say there is no way to do so without building a separate key to unlock the data — often called a "backdoor," which they say amounts to a vulnerability that can be exploited by hackers and foreign governments.

The letter is signed by three of the five members of a presidential review group appointed by Obama in 2013 to assess technology policies in the wake of leaks by former intelligence contractor Edward Snowden. The signatories urge Obama to follow the group's unanimous recommendation that the government should "fully support and not undermine efforts to create encryption standards" and not "in any way subvert, undermine, weaken or make vulnerable" commercial software.

Richard A. Clarke, former cybersecurity adviser to President George W. Bush and one of three review group members to sign the letter, noted that a similar effort by the government in the 1990s to require phone companies to build a backdoor for encrypted voice calls was rebuffed. "If they couldn't pull it off at the end of the Cold War, they sure as hell aren't going to pull it off now," he said.

Comey, he said, "is the best FBI director I've ever seen," but "he's wrong on this [issue]."

Congress, too, is unlikely to pass legislation that would require technology companies to develop keys or other modes of access to their products and services in the post-Snowden area.

Lawmakers on both sides of the aisle have expressed skepticism toward the pleas of law enforcement agencies. Rep. Ted Lieu, a California Democrat with a computer science degree, called backdoors in software "technologically stupid."

Ronald L. Rivest, an inventor of the RSA encryption algorithm (his name is the "R" in "RSA"), said standards can be weakened to allow law enforcement officials access to encrypted data. "But," he said, "you've done great damage to our security infrastructure if you do that."

The issue is not simply national, said Rivest, a computer science professor at MIT who signed the letter. "Once you make exceptions for U.S. law enforcement, you're also making exceptions for the British, the French, the Israelis and the Chinese, and eventually it'll be the North Koreans."

The signatories include policy experts who normally side with national-security hawks. Paul Rosenzweig, a former Bush administration senior policy official at the Department of Homeland Security, said: "If I actually thought there was a way to build a U.S.-government-only backdoor, then I might be persuaded. But that's just not reality."

Rosenzweig said that "there are other capabilities" that law enforcement can deploy. They will be "less satisfying," he said, but "they will make do."

Privacy activist Kevin Bankston organized the letter to maintain pressure on the White House. "Since last fall, the president has been letting his top law enforcement officials criticize companies for making their devices more secure and letting them suggest that Congress should pass pro-backdoor legislation," said Bankston, policy director of the New America Foundation's Open Technology Institute.

"It's time for Obama to put an end to these dangerous suggestions that we should deliberately weaken the cybersecurity of Americans' products and services," he said. "It's time for America to lead the world toward a more secure future rather than a digital ecosystem riddled with vulnerabilities of our own making."

FROM MORNING CYBERSECURITY: HUGE COALITION PRESSURES WHITE HOUSE ON ENCRYPTION — Nearly 150 civil society groups, trade groups and cybersecurity experts this morning are sending a letter to President Barack Obama trying to force the administration to reject encryption workarounds for law enforcement, Pro Cybersecurity's Tal Kopan reports. The letter quotes from the President's Review Group on Intelligence and Communications Technologies' recommendation that the administration support strong encryption and not seek to undermine it. "The administration faces a critical choice: Will it adopt policies that foster a global digital ecosystem that is more secure, or less? That choice may well define the future of the Internet in the 21st century," the letter says.

The letter is largely timed to influence an internal review of options that is being prepped for Obama, reported first by The Washington Post (<http://wapo.st/1FvUPcP> ). The group, organized by New America's Open Technology Institute, reads like a who's who of the cyber world. Signers include Access, ACLU, Center for Democracy & Technology, Electronic Frontier Foundation, The Tor Project, Apple, Cisco, CloudFlare, Facebook, Google, Hewlett-Packard, Microsoft, Mozilla, Twitter and Yahoo. "We thought it was time for the community to draw a line in the sand," OTI's Kevin Bankston told Tal. "It's time for the White House to come out strong in support of strong encryption." Hi John-

We have two options for your return into DC next Monday.

There's a 9pm United flight from LaGuardia that arrives in DCA at 10:14pm and a 9:30pm from JFK that arrives in DCA at 10:45pm. Do you have a preference?

Am I correct in understanding you do not need a ticket into NYC?

Please confirm your name listed on your ID and date of birth and we'll take care of the ticket.

We really appreciate your flexibility!

Subject: Suggestions for a Policy and Leg Director for us?

Hi all,

We are continuing our search for a Director of Policy and Legislation. Could I impose on you to take a few minutes to think about whether you know anyone who'd be good for this position, regardless of whether they are currently actively looking for a new position?

With our current hundred active grass-tops members, we're already able to get meetings with most Democratic Senators. On our mid-November Lobby Day, for example, our members met with 8 Senators and Senior staff for two others. Now, as we implement our plans to scale up our membership, we're ready to hire a first-rate policy and legislative director.

The summary job description is below, along with a link to a more detailed description. Although not mentioned below, it's also likely that a progressive PAC will contract with Voices for a piece of this person's time. While the most important qualification is Senate and legislative advocacy experience, PAC experience would also be helpful.

Voices for Progress is seeking a seasoned federal policy and legislative advocacy professional. This person will work directly with Voices' president on policy issues, including the Clean Air Act/EPA authority, judicial nominations, the federal budget, and other issues as they arise, and will supervise one other staff person. The ideal candidate would have experience on a Senate staff, lobbying experience, and experience summarizing complex policy issues for lay audiences. For more info: <http://voicesforprogress.org/about/careers/policy-legislative-director>

Many thanks for giving this some thought.

Neera,

If you have a few minutes in the next few days, let's chat about your remarks at the DA closing dinner next week.

My understanding of the run of show is that Kate Clinton will emcee, John Stocks will make opening remarks and recognize DA founding partners, there'll be a nice video, I'll introduce Rob Stein, there will then be a q and a between Felicia Wong and John Podesta (who, with me and a few other outsiders, was at the original DA meeting in Arizona ten years ago), and we'll close with the SF Gay Men's Chorus. My initial instinct is that it would be good for you to say what DA has meant to the progressive movement from the point of view of a movement organization (make something up:), and close with some words about what progressives need to do in the next five years.

So glad you can do this.

Mark is meeting with people to learn more about next steps for his philanthropy and social action and it's hard to imagine someone better placed or more experienced than you to help him. As you may know, he's young and hungry to learn — always in learning mode — and is early in his career when it comes to his philanthropic efforts. He's begun to think about whether/how he might want to shape advocacy efforts to support his philanthropic priorities and is particularly interested in meeting people who could help him understand how to move the needle on the specific public policy issues he cares most about. He wants to meet folks who can inform his understanding about effective political operations to advance public policy goals on social oriented objectives (like immigration, education or basic scientific research).

In case you have time on any trip, Andrea can schedule. And if it has to wait until after the campaign, we will all understand.

Sheryl

Subject: Staff/AAP -- Payout of Accrued Leave

Dear Members of the Georgetown Community,

In a continuing effort to contain costs while maintaining valuable offerings for the Georgetown community, we have reviewed the policies for paid leave accrual and payout at termination. After careful consideration and input, University policy will be changed to cap the payout of accrued leave at $15,000. This will result in changes to Human Resources Policies 602 (Paid Leave for Staff) and 612 (Paid Leave for AAPs).

Effective June 30, 2015, the maximum amount of accrued and unused paid leave that will be paid at time of termination will be $15,000, except for employees earning $200,000 or more annually who will receive no payout at termination. This change will not affect accrual rates. Staff and AAP employees will continue to accrue up to a maximum of 288 hours of paid leave. In practical terms, this change will have no effect on those with annual earnings up to $108,333, as those employees will still receive full payment for 100% of their accrued and unused paid leave. Staff and AAP employees earning between $108,333 and $200,000 will be paid for their accrued and unused paid leave up to a maximum of $15,000. Those earning $200,000 or more will not be eligible for payout at termination.

The University recognizes the importance and value of paid leave for a variety of reasons, and encourages employees to utilize their leave to help maintain a healthy work-life balance, a key tenet of our GUWellness program. Managers should do their best, consistent with operational needs and considerations, to grant requests for leave.

Should you have any questions regarding this change, please contact the Human Resources Generalist assigned to your department.

Thank you.

Politico: "Guy Cecil won't manage Clinton 2016 campaign"

By Maggie Haberman

Guy Cecil, a campaign hand for Hillary Clinton in 2008 who was mentioned as a potential campaign manager if she runs again, is planning to help the former Secretary of State outside of any official campaign structure in 2016, POLITICO has learned.

Instead, Cecil plans to help her in a non-campaign capacity.

"I have spent time with Secretary Clinton encouraging her to run because I believe our country needs her vision and leadership," Cecil said in a statement describing how intends to aid Clinton if she runs. "I have offered her my full support and will be her most vocal volunteer, but after 10 years of some of the toughest campaigns around, I am eager to try my hand at something new and to serve my country in a different way. Even better, I will finally get to take a long delayed honeymoon with my husband."

Cecil until recently was executive director of the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee. He was one of a small number of campaign advisers to whom Clinton turned at the end of 2007 to rescue her effort as gaps in Clinton's field operation became apparent. Cecil has also had a strong relationship with Bill Clinton since then.

Cecil spoke repeatedly with Hillary Clinton during and since the midterm campaign. The focus of those conversations was about the midterm races and lessons for her potential next presidential campaign. In those talks, he had discussed wanting to help her from outside the campaign.

"Hillary Clinton has always felt that Guy Cecil is as good as they come," said Clinton spokesman Nick Merrill said, calling him "supremely smart, savvy, and always focused on the big picture."

Clinton “knows there are few champions in politics today as tirelessly devoted to the protection and advancement of Democratic values as Guy is,” Merrill added. “And no matter what, she will always count on Guy to continue that work for her, for the Democratic Party, and for America.”

For his next move, Cecil has met with a number of non-governmental organizations and nonprofits. He’s also discussed a potential political firm based in Washington, and there have been discussions about a potential role for him in a super PAC backing a Clinton campaign.

Without Cecil looking to manage the effort, the already-small field of potential campaign managers who are discussed shrinks further. Robby Mook, who managed Virginia Gov. Terry McAuliffe’s campaign, is a frontrunner. People such as EMILY’s List head Stephanie Schriock and former Clinton campaign adviser and California-based strategist Ace Smith have been mentioned as well.

Cecil’s statement comes as the contours of Clinton’s likely campaign will begin to take shape early next year. Her anticipated campaign chair, John Podesta, is expected to step down from his current job as White House counselor sometime after Obama’s State of the Union address. But beyond Podesta, it isn’t immediately clear how she plans to fill most of the roughly half-dozen top jobs within her campaign.

Clinton’s timetable for announcing a campaign has been a source of speculation among Democrats looking to work for her and reporters covering her for months. Her paid speech schedule at one point was cited by some supporters as a clue toward her intentions. The speeches are a red herring, in that she can always cancel them if she decides to declare before they take place.

But they reflect a mindset of a potential candidate who opted against sending a signal about her intentions this year.

Cecil used to work at the Dewey Square Group, the consulting firm where Bill and Hillary Clinton confidante Minyon Moore works. The firm has been quietly working on portions of the pre-Clinton campaign, according to several people familiar with its efforts, although firm officials have insisted they are not doing anything formal.

[Subtitle:] Some presidential contenders capitalized in 2014. But many look worse today than a year ago.

With 2014 just about in the books, the next presidential election is set to shift into high gear in the new year. Two candidates—Jeb Bush and Jim Webb—are already exploring bids, and the political world is waiting for dozens of other potentials to make their intentions known in the coming weeks and months.

But just because no one else is technically “exploring” a bid at this point doesn’t mean others haven’t been considering a White House run for the better part of the past year. 2014 saw a flurry of activity from politicians jockeying for early position in the 2016 field at the Capitol, in statehouses, and on the midterm trail all across the country. Some emerged in a more fortunate position than others.

Here’s a look at which possible presidential contenders are better off today than they were on Jan. 1—and which are worse off.

BETTER OFF

Jeb Bush: As the first Republican to announce he is "actively exploring" a presidential run, Bush has secured the inside track on becoming the GOP's establishment candidate. His early move will allow him to set the tone at the outset of the party's nominating contest: Bush is expected to cut into the bases of several potential rivals, and he may force other candidates to alter their timetables. Still unknown is how Bush's more moderate stances on immigration and education will play in a GOP primary, and how he will perform on the campaign trail 12 years after his last run for elected office. But at the moment, Bush is the slight front-runner for the Republican nomination—a position he was not in a year ago, when it was unclear if he would even go for it.

Rand Paul: At the beginning of the year, Paul was still widely seen as a fringe candidate who wouldn't be able to compete in a modern-day Republican primary. Paul still has not totally shed that reputation, but he is now more widely accepted within the mainstream of the party than he was in January. Paul made inroads with members of the party's establishment wing, including Mitch McConnell and the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, and directed a significant effort toward courting minorities and young voters. Foreign policy remains a weakness for Paul, who struggled to articulate his position during the heat of the ISIS debate. Paul's path to the GOP nomination still isn't 100 percent clear, but he's more in the mix than he was 12 months ago.

Marco Rubio: Looking to put his failed 2013 immigration reform push behind him, Rubio went out of his way to position himself as a foreign policy candidate this year. He gave a series of speeches critiquing President Obama's policy while establishing himself as a hawk on the topic. Now, Rubio has become the chief opponent of Obama's plan to normalize relations with Cuba. Rubio also used his background as the son of immigrants to develop a message on economic mobility. Bush's announcement will certainly make it tougher for Rubio to attract the money he would need from donors in Florida. But he already has a strong political team in place and the ability to be a top-tier candidate.

Scott Walker: Coming off his third statewide victory in a purple state in just four years, Walker is riding high heading into 2015. For a brief period in the fall, he looked vulnerable against Democrat Mary Burke, but thanks to his immense popularity among Republicans, Walker came out on top yet again. The governor remains a favorite of both the business and tea-party factions of the party, boasting a fiscal record that few other Republicans can match. While Walker looks like a strong presidential candidate on paper, it's not clear how he will be received outside of Wisconsin. A few potential pitfalls await him in the new year, but of all the Midwestern governors weighing a White House run, he has emerged as the most formidable.

John Kasich: Speaking of Midwestern governors, Kasich was expected to win reelection at the beginning of 2014, but no one saw his 31-point trouncing of Democrat Ed Fitzgerald coming. That margin was in large part due to Fitzgerald's weaknesses as a candidate, but Kasich can now add a second win in the presidential swing state of Ohio to an already compelling resume. His support of Medicaid expansion and recent comments expressing an openness to a pathway to citizenship for undocumented immigrants, though, could come back to haunt him in a GOP primary. Still, Kasich was almost completely off the presidential radar in January and is now, at the very least, a dark horse heading into 2015.

Rick Perry: Perry is in a better position than a year ago for one simple reason: He had nowhere to go but up. His disastrous 2012 campaign still haunts him, but he has gone to great lengths to improve his image ahead of an expected second bid for the White House in 2016. Perry has surrounded himself with a new team of advisers, met with some of the party's top policy experts, and spent more time in Iowa this year than any other Republican considering a presidential campaign. Perry was indicted on abuse-of-power allegations in August, but that seems to have only strengthened his standing among the GOP base. Bottom line: Perry may never fully recover from 2012, but he's at least being taken seriously as a contender again.

WORSE OFF

Hillary Clinton: Make no mistake: Clinton is still far and away the front-runner to win the Democratic nomination, and any Republican would have a difficult time defeating her in a general election. But as Clinton shook the rust off and reentered the political fray this year, her favorability rating came back down to earth. Additionally, as Obama's popularity plummeted, Republicans attempted to link the former secretary of State to her former boss at every turn. She also endured bad press throughout the year over her tour on the paid speaking circuit. And while a formidable Democratic challenger hasn't emerged, Clinton has yet to clearly outline the basis for her expected campaign. She'll have plenty of time to do that in 2015 if she decides to run, but overall, Clinton is in a slightly less favorable position than she was a year ago.

Chris Christie: No one had a worse start to the year than Christie. The George Washington Bridge scandal has permanently tarnished his image, and with federal indictments possibly around the corner, it might be just the beginning. Plus, New Jersey's economy remains sluggish, and the state's credit was downgraded for the eighth time under Christie's watch. One bright spot: Under his chairmanship of the Republican Governors Association, Republicans won 24 of the 36 gubernatorial races on the ballot, including elections in deep-blue states such as Illinois and Maryland. Christie entered the year as a—if not the—top contender for the GOP nomination. He has some serious work to do if he wants to reclaim that status in 2015.

Ted Cruz: Cruz may still be the tea party's favorite son, but the Texas senator's star power has diminished since the days of the 2013 government shutdown (his failed effort to torpedo the Senate spending bill this month encapsulated that.) Cruz lost two key political staffers last month, raising questions about whether he can put together a team with big-league talent. Cruz is well positioned to be the evangelical candidate in 2016, but that's no longer enough to automatically become a top contender for the GOP nomination. He hasn't been able to expand his base, and as someone who has relished being a thorn in the side of the Republican establishment, it will be a tall order for Cruz to accomplish that in 2015.

Bobby Jindal: Jindal, once seen as a rising star in the Republican Party, has had his eye on the White House for some time now, but he struggled this year to gain any traction in a crowded GOP field. The Louisiana governor spent lots of time outside of his home state in 2014, campaigning for Republicans, attending state party dinners, giving speeches, and appearing on the Sunday talk shows, yet he is still largely unknown nationally. In Louisiana, Jindal's approval rating dropped and he received blowback over reversing his position on Common Core. Jindal's efforts to appeal to both the establishment and the tea-party wings of the party haven't gotten him anywhere, so he may need to find a new approach heading into 2015.

Martin O'Malley: Few worked harder than O'Malley to become a legitimate presidential contender this year, yet he's still in rougher shape now than he was in January. O'Malley spent the year stumping and raising money for Democrats (especially those in Iowa, New Hampshire, and South Carolina) on the 2014 ballot, but the majority of them wound up losing. Back home in Maryland, O'Malley's favorability rating dipped underwater and his lieutenant governor lost the election to succeed him in a state where registered Democrats outnumber Republicans 2-to-1. On top of all that, O'Malley is still polling in the low single digits among Democrats nationally and is now expected to push back his timeline for announcing a possible presidential run.

[Subtitle:] How the Deep South is trying to game the GOP primary.

The Deep South has elected Republicans to every top office in the region. Now it wants to be sure that clout extends to the choice of the GOP's 2016 presidential nominee.

Officials in five Southern states — Tennessee, Georgia, Mississippi, Alabama and Arkansas — are coordinating to hold their primary on March 1, 2016. Texas and Florida are considering also holding a primary the same day but may wait until later in the month. Either way, March 1 would be a Southern Super Tuesday, voting en masse on the heels of Iowa, New Hampshire, South Carolina and Nevada.

The joint primary, which appears increasingly likely to happen, would present a crucial early test for Republican White House hopefuls among the party's most conservative voters. It could, in theory, boost a conservative alternative to a Republican who has emerged as the establishment favorite from the four states that kick off the nominating process. But one risk is that the deep-red complexion of the Southern states' primary electorates would empower a candidate who can't win in general-election battlegrounds like Ohio and Colorado.

Republicans from the South say their states make up the heart of the GOP and it's only fitting that the region have commensurate say over who the party puts forward to compete for the White House. Proponents are already dubbing March 1 the "SEC primary," after the NCAA's athletic powerhouse Southeastern Conference.

"We think it's important that the next president of the United States – he or she, Democrat or Republican – come through our states and speak with our citizens about our issues," said Mississippi Secretary of State Delbert Hosemann. "My gut feeling is this will happen, and you'll see candidates start to spend a lot more time in the South in the next six months."

The Republican National Committee changed its rules this year to try pushing back the Iowa caucuses from January in 2012 until February in 2016. New penalties also make it virtually impossible for any state other than New Hampshire, South Carolina and Nevada to vote before the end of that month.

The Southern states, which are preparing to lock in March 1 through a combination of legislative and executive actions, want to be first out of the gate afterwards.

"It gives them a real power punch right after the early states get out of the way," said former Tennessee Republican chairman Chip Saltsman, who managed Mike Huckabee's 2008 presidential campaign. "Someone who can come out of February having won two of the four early states and then run the table in the South would be set up with huge momentum."

Mitt Romney struggled in the Deep South in 2012. Newt Gingrich won South Carolina and his home state of Georgia, while Rick Santorum carried Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana. The Southern states planning to hold the March 1 primary could pose similar problems for a candidate seen as insufficiently conservative or too close to the party's establishment wing.

"This is a conservative area, and conservative candidates would probably do quite well," said Alabama Secretary of State Jim Bennett.

Florida and Texas are much bigger states with a lot more delegates at stake, but each is very expensive to advertise in. More importantly, both are home to favorite sons who could scare others from competing against them: Jeb Bush and Marco Rubio hail from Florida, while Ted Cruz and Rick Perry are from Texas.

Some GOP insiders believe that Florida and Texas will opt to push back their primaries until later in March. Under the new RNC rules, states that wait until March 15 can have "winner take all" primaries, with the candidate receiving the most votes collecting all of a state's delegates. The potential presidential candidates from Florida and Texas are likely to prefer that. In 2012, Florida lost half its delegates by voting before it was allowed to.

It will be very difficult for a candidate who does not win in one of the first four states to survive until March as a viable contender. Money dries up, endorsements go elsewhere and volunteers lose their enthusiasm. So the test in the South will likely pit the winners of the first states against each other.

It might also have unintended effects.

In 1988, Democrats who then controlled the region decided their states should vote as a bloc on the second Tuesday in March. They hoped to boost a moderate or centrist candidate who would be more competitive in the general election than a candidate from the Northeastern like then-Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis. Then-Tennessee Sen. Al Gore wound up winning five Southern states that day, but Jesse Jackson – helped by large numbers of African-American voters — also won five. Vice President George H.W. Bush, meanwhile, won all the states in the region and soon after secured the Republican nomination.

"It kind of backfired on them," said Josh Putnam, who teaches political science at Appalachian State University and closely tracks the primary calendar on his Frontloading blog.

The RNC rule requiring that states voting on March 1 award their delegates proportionally increases the likelihood of a similar situation in 2016, with different states choosing different candidates and no decisive statement out of the region.

The primary calendars that are set by the GOP secretaries of state will apply to both Democrats and Republicans. In the marathon 2008 fight between Hillary Clinton and Barack Obama, Southern states wound up playing important roles, but at least at the moment, Clinton appears to have a much clearer path to the nomination.

An open question is whether the Southern states will have March 1 to themselves. There's little to prevent other states from scheduling primaries the same day.

Bennett, the Alabama Secretary of State, worries that Southern states' power will be diluted if the day is too crowded. He pointed to Super Tuesday in 2008, when 24 states voted on Feb. 5. In 2012, parties successfully discouraged such front-loading. The most states to vote on any one day that year was 10, on March 6.

"If it's limited to six or eight states, I think it would bring candidates to the southern part of the United States," said Bennett. "The problem with the old Super Tuesday is ... that it really didn't accomplish the goal of bringing candidates before our voters. It was too spread out."

He said he fears that including Florida and Texas in the March 1 primary would "dilute" the sway of the smaller Southern states. "I favor a limited number," he said.

Putnam does not expect a March 1 cluster. More likely, he says, is a series of semi-regional primaries. Michigan, Illinois and Missouri might all vote on March 15, creating a Midwest primary. A few Western states may team up to vote on another Tuesday later in March.

"They won't be alone, but as March 1 is shaping up now, it's taking a decidedly Southern flavor," said Putnam.

Georgia Secretary of State Brian Kemp, who dreamed up the "SEC primary" branding, said he doesn't care who the nominee ends up being. He just wants his state to be relevant in presidential politics.

"Hopefully, from a selfish perspective, it makes Georgia's voice count, whether you're a Republican or a Democrat," Kemp said. "I don't want to vote after the nominee is chosen. Other folks in the South feel the same way."

Huffington Post: "Politico's Laura McGann Joins Vox To Lead Political Coverage"

By Michael Calderone

December 21, 2014, 8:00 p.m. EST

NEW YORK — Politico deputy managing editor Laura McGann is joining Vox as the site's first political editor.

In an interview with The Huffington Post, McGann suggested that Vox, the general-interest site founded earlier this year by Ezra Klein, Melissa Bell and Matt Yglesias, could make its coverage of the 2016 elections "distinct" by emphasizing candidates' policy positions and offering readers contextual information beyond the latest stump speech.

"You don't need to write a brand-new story every time a candidate says something," McGann said.

Yet that's increasingly what happens during a presidential campaign, with embedded TV producers and political reporters live-tweeting a candidate's remarks and immediately filing stories online. The 2012 presidential cycle seemed defined, at times, by excessive coverage of candidate "gaffes" and fleeting outrage on Twitter.

Vox's expansion of its political coverage is expected to keep in line with the site's core mission of explaining the news. Stories on Vox often include a set of supplementary "index cards" that explain the context of a debate or news event currently making headlines.

Similarly, McGann, who will start at Vox on Jan. 5, suggested the site would create political content of value to readers beyond the campaign story of the moment. For instance, she noted that Hillary Clinton, the presumed 2016 Democratic front-runner, has been expressing views on foreign policy for decades. So in covering Clinton's latest foreign policy statement, Vox would presumably offer additional resources, like the index cards or other online tools, in an attempt to explain how Clinton's most recent remarks exist within a broader worldview. That supplemental material can be updated and used in future stories.

In interviews, Klein, a former blogger and columnist for The Washington Post, has described such content as "persistent," meaning that it has a longer lifespan than just the latest news cycle. McGann also used the term in discussing the site's political coverage plans.

For its 2016 coverage, McGann said Vox intends "to explain to the reader what is significant about these candidates' policy perspectives" and "why they should be paying attention to specific candidates."

Currently, Vox's politics and policy team includes seven reporters, but McGann said it's expected to grow. She also stressed that Vox, unlike some news organizations, doesn't draw sharp distinctions between covering politics and policy. "We don't want politics and policy reporters to live in separate silos, as they have in other newsrooms," she said.

In a statement, Klein described McGann as "one of the most visionary editors in the business, and one of the best political minds in Washington."

"She has big plans for Vox Politics," said Klein. "Under her direction, we're really going to be able to give our audience a political resource unlike what they can get anywhere else."

McGann, who spent four years at Politico, has also reported and edited at Talking Points Memo, Nieman Journalism Lab, MSNBC and The Washington Independent, a nonprofit news site that shuttered in 2010.

She's the third high-ranking Politico editor to leave in the past week, with White House editor Dan Berman joining National Journal and deputy managing editor Gregg Birnbaum heading to the New York Daily News. On Friday, Politico editor Susan Glasser touted several recent hires and said the company is going through a period of "growth and rising ambition."

Vox's approach to 2016 coverage will surely be different from that of Politico, which upped the metabolism of political reporting during the 2008 election by breaking any and all campaign news online. While Vox's focus may be on explaining the news, McGann indicated the site will also try breaking some stories. For example, McGann said she'd like Vox to compete on first getting details when a campaign is rolling out a new policy proposal.

Some aspects of Vox's 2016 coverage have yet to be determined, such as whether or not the site will assign reporters to follow candidates on the campaign trail. McGann said "there's room there to experiment" and the site will figure out how, and when, stories can be enhanced by having reporters on the ground.

"We are definitely interested in travel," she said, "but we're not sure if a traditional approach, to stick someone on the plane, is the best idea."

Mother Jones: "Jim Webb Wants to Be President. Too Bad He's Awful on Climate Change."

By Patrick Caldwell

December 22, 2014, 6:30 a.m. EST

[Subtitle:] The former Virginia senator has a record of standing up for dirty energy.

Hillary Clinton may be dominating every poll of potential Democratic hopefuls for the White House, but some progressives are desperate to find a candidate who will challenge her from the left. Groups have sprung up to encourage Elizabeth Warren to take a stab at the nomination, but with the Massachusetts senator repeatedly saying she isn't running, liberal activists will likely have to turn elsewhere—perhaps to socialist Sen. Bernie Sanders (Vt.) or Maryland Gov. Martin O'Malley—if they aren't satisfied with Clinton. But so far, the only Democratic alternative officially in the race is former Virginia Sen. Jim Webb, who launched an exploratory committee in November.

A former Secretary of the Navy under President Ronald Reagan, Webb is being touted by some on the left as an Appalachian populist who could champion causes Clinton would rather ignore. The Nation's William Greider, for example, lauded Webb's presidential ambitions in a column headlined "Why Jim Webb Could be Hillary Clinton's Worst Nightmare." Greider praised Webb's non-interventionist tendencies in foreign policy (Webb was a vocal opponent of the Iraq War). "I think of him as a vanguard politician—that rare type who is way out ahead of conventional wisdom and free to express big ideas the media herd regards as taboo," Greider wrote, while acknowledging that Webb was unlikely to win.

There's at least one key issue, however, on which Webb's record is far from progressive: global warming. That's a big deal. Unlike Obamacare and financial reform, much of the progress President Barack Obama has made on climate change rests on of execution actions that his successor could undo. At first glance, Webb might look like a typical Democrat when it comes to environmental policy. The League of Conservation Voters gives him a lifetime score of 81 percent—on par with Hillary Clinton's 82 percent rating, though far below Sanders at 95 percent. And unlike most of the Republican presidential hopefuls, he acknowledges that humans are causing climate change. He even supports solving the problem—at least in theory.

But when it came to actual legislation, Webb used his six years in the US Senate to stand in the way of Democratic efforts to combat climate change. Virginia, after all, is a coal state, and Webb regularly stood up for the coal industry, earning the ire of environmentalists. As Grist's Ben Adler succinctly summed it up, "Jim Webb sucks on climate change."

Perhaps Webb's biggest break with the standard Democratic position on climate is his vocal opposition to the use of EPA rules under the Clean Air Act to limit carbon emissions from coal power plants. Earlier this year, the Obama administration proposed regulations that could cut existing coal plant emissions by as much as 30 percent below 2005 levels by 2030. Those new rules became a key factor in the historic climate deal Obama recently reached with China, and they will almost certainly figure prominently in next year's Paris climate negotiations. But back in 2011, Webb went to the floor of the Senate to denounce the idea that the federal government has the power to regulate carbon emissions under existing law. "I am not convinced the Clean Air Act was ever intended to regulate or classify as a dangerous pollutant something as basic and ubiquitous in our atmosphere as carbon dioxide," he said.

Webb also supported legislation from fellow coal-state Sen. Jay Rockefeller (D-W.Va.) that would have delayed the EPA's authority to add new rules governing coal plant emissions. "This regulatory framework is so broad and potentially far reaching that it could eventually touch nearly every facet of this nation's economy, putting unnecessary burdens on our industries and driving many businesses overseas through policies that have been implemented purely at the discretion of the executive branch and absent the clearly stated intent of the Congress," he said in a release.

But Webb's opposition to major climate initiatives wasn't limited to executive action. In 2008, Democrats (and a few Republicans) in Congress tried to pass a cap-and-trade bill that was intended to slow global warming by putting a price on carbon emissions. The bill would have likely been vetoed by then-President George W. Bush, but it never got that far. Webb was part of a cohort of Senate Democrats who blocked the measure. "We need to be able to address a national energy strategy and then try to work on environmental efficiencies as part of that plan," Webb told Politico at the time. "We can't just start with things like emission standards at a time when we're at a crisis with the entire national energy policy."

When cap and trade came up again in 2009—this time with Barack Obama in the Oval Office—Webb again played a major role in preventing the bill from passing the Senate. "It's an enormously complex thing to implement," Webb said of the 2009 bill. "There are a lot of people in the middle between the 'cap' and the 'trade' that are going to make a lot of money." Webb also voted to prevent Senate Democrats from using budget reconciliation procedures to pass a cap and trade bill with simple majority, essentially dooming any hope for serious climate legislation during the first years of Obama's presidency.

That same year, Obama attended a United Nations summit in Copenhagen in a failed bid to hammer out an international climate accord. Obama sought a limited, nonbinding agreement in which the US and other countries would pledge to reduce their CO2 output. Webb wasn't having it. Before Obama went abroad, Webb sent the president a letter asserting that he lacked the "unilateral power" to make such a deal.

Coal wasn't the only polluting industry that found an ally in Webb. After the BP oil spill in 2010, the Obama administration put a hold on new offshore oil drilling, which provoked Webb. "In placing such a broad moratorium on offshore drilling, the Obama Administration has over-reacted to the circumstances surrounding the Deepwater Horizon disaster," Webb said in a press release. At other times, Webb championed drilling projects off Virginia's coasts and voted regularly for bills that would expand the territory in which oil companies could plant rigs offshore. "Unbelievable," the Sierra Club once remarked of Webb's support for offshore drilling. In 2012, Webb was one of just four Democrats in the Senate who voted to keep tax loopholes for oil companies.

But it's Webb's support for coal that most concerns environmentalists. "Jim Webb is an apologist for the coal industry," says Brad Johnson, a climate activist who runs the website Hill Heat. "Unfortunately he doesn't seem to realize that greenhouse pollution is the greatest threat we face to economic justice in this nation."

Washington Examiner: "Elizabeth Warren opens the Ted Cruz playbook to steal Hillary Clinton's spotlight"

By Rebecca Berg

December 21, 2014, 5:00 a.m. EST

While Hillary Clinton is remaining relatively quiet, hoping to keep her powder dry in advance of the presidential election cycle, Elizabeth Warren is growing louder.

Fresh off of leading a fight over a spending deal struck by congressional lawmakers, which the White House supported, Warren this week pushed back against a trade deal being negotiated by President Obama with Pacific nations, warning it could hamper efforts to keep Wall Street in check.

"With millions of families still struggling to recover from the last financial crisis and the Great Recession that followed, we cannot afford a trade deal that undermines the government's ability to protect the American economy," read a letter signed by Warren and a few other senators.

Warren has said she is not currently running for president. But, whether she is or not, her vocal defense of progressive policies is driving a wedge in the Democratic Party, with tangible repercussions for the coming presidential election.

Meanwhile, more Democrats are offering praise for Warren and what she represents. This week, Rep. Keith Ellison, a prominent progressive among House Democrats, gave a boost to the idea of Warren as a presidential candidate and foil to Clinton.

"I would love to see Elizabeth Warren in this race. I think it would be fantastic. I think that it would help the quality of the debate and she may win," Ellison said Thursday on a Democracy For America conference call, MSNBC reported. "But even if she doesn't, I think she'll make Hillary Clinton a better candidate."

Clinton, for her part, is already well-liked among progressive Democrats, polls show, and still holds a commanding lead among other potential Democratic candidates, including Warren.

But, much as Sen. Ted Cruz, R-Texas, made a name for himself last year and stirred speculation about a potential presidential campaign by taking ideological stands appealing to his party's base, Warren might find greater power and attention in the minority.

As a newly minted member of Senate Democratic leadership beginning next month, Warren will have a sturdy platform from which to express her positions — and, for as long as she is a potential candidate for president, a megaphone.

"There's an arc in Sen. Warren's approach," said Jim Manley, a Democratic strategist and former aide to outgoing Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid. "She started off keeping her head down and trying to avoid the national media, and now she's picking and choosing her spots to elevate issues."

Here is what we have: Huffington post is doing a story tomorrow "fact checking" the idea that there was a push for a constitutional amendment in 1996, as HRC claimed was true. The piece will essentially say there was not, and will quote Rosen's tweet and Evan Wolfson saying this was not true and was hardly a basis for DOMA to be signed by WJC.

Xochitl has also gotten an inquiry from the Blade.

In addition to this, Socarides tells us he heard from NYT on this, though the campaign has not, so we do not know what he is referring to. I would not be surprised, however, if activists we're pitching this.

All that said, I do not think a statement from HRC is warranted simply based on these inquiries. Indeed, I think a statement from her likely attracts more coverage than just these inquiries and also could give the appearance that we are responding to Bernie at JJ, rather than clarifying our own remarks to Maddow. I missed the beginning of the conf call this afternoon on thia, but i had assumed we were preparing an HRC statement less for HuffPo and more because that is what political thought was needed to quell the LGBT backlash.

If that is not the case, then for my purposes, I would just propose a spokesman statement that accounts for Dan's point (that she will not disavow her theory about the constitutional amendment) but also addresses the community's outrage over the idea that we might be trying to justify support for the law in 96 by saying something like, "Regardless of the differing motives that led to the passage of DOMA, none were justifiable since, as both Hillary and President clinton have said, the law was clearly discriminatory."

I'm not sure anyone has asked. We would put it out there.

On Friday, and in many instances previously, I was asked about my position on the Defense of Marriage Act (DOMA). I appreciate that people have differing views of the DOMA situation [other word?] in 1996. The environment for gays and lesbians was different then and there were struggles about the best paths to take. That is common in all social change movements. I have been very open that my own views have evolved over the years.

I hope the important thing is that we are now moving forward toward justice, together. In 2013, I added my voice in support of marriage equality "personally and as a matter of policy and law." As I said then, LGBT Americans are full and equal citizens and they deserve the full and equal rights of citizenship. Like so many others, my personal views have been shaped over time by people I have known and loved, by my experience representing our nation on the world stage, my devotion to law and human rights, and the guiding principles of my faith. That's why, as a Senator, I pushed for laws that would extend protections to the LGBT community in the workplace and that would make violence towards LGBT individuals a hate crime. And as Secretary of State, I put LGBT rights on the global agenda and told the world that "gay rights are human rights and human rights are gay rights." In my speech last night in Iowa, I didn't look back to the America of the past, I looked forward to the America we need to build together. I pledged to fight for LGBT Americans who, despite all our progress, in many places can still get married on Saturday and fired on Monday just because of who they are and who they love. In this campaign and as President, I will keep fighting for equality and opportunity for every American.

I originally flagged HRC's Maddow remarks as potentially problematic in part because her wording closely linked her to two unfavorable policies of the past even as no one in the community was asking her to "own" them. Given that, my recommendation would be to make this statement about just her, her evolution, and her record -- not bring in WJC.

Relatedly, if we release a statement tonight, it will very clearly be in response to the Maddow interview. To the extent we can, I advocate for owning that so that we can clean this up completely, rightly position her as a champion of LGBT issues, and make sure we move on from any discussion of looming amendments or her being involved in passing either DADT or DOMA. Without getting into the weeds, can we say that the broader point is that the country is in a different place now on LGBT issues -- and thank goodness it is -- and that she's so happy each policy has been placed in the dustbin of history?

Last thought: I have raised this a few times to a smaller number of people on this thread but will flag this for the larger group as well. At Keene State College, she specifically cited friends playing a part in her evolution, which we echo here. That's fine,

IMO, and quite believable. But if I were a reporter and wanted to keep the evolution story alive, I would start asking which friends she was talking to and ask us to provide them. Not a problem per se, but I think it is worth flagging now so we aren't caught by surprise later.

The larger point I was trying to make about DOMA, however, is still true. It was neither proposed nor supported by anyone in the Clinton administration at the time. It was an effort by the Republicans in Congress to distract attention from the real issues facing the country by using gay marriage, which had very little support then, as a wedge issue in the election. The legislation passed by overwhelming veto-proof margins in both houses of Congress and President Clinton signed it with serious reservations he expressed at the time. Luckily the country has evolved way beyond this in the last 20 years and most Americans, including the Supreme Court, now embrace LGBT equality. We are a better country for it. Although there is much work that remains, and I'm eager to help advance the day when we are all truly equal.

Bill Clinton: It's time to overturn DOMA

The writer is the 42nd president of the United States.

In 1996, I signed the Defense of Marriage Act. Although that was only 17 years ago, it was a very different time. In no state in the union was same-sex marriage recognized, much less available as a legal right, but some were moving in that direction. Washington, as a result, was swirling with all manner of possible responses, some quite draconian. As a bipartisan group of former senators stated in their March 1 amicus brief to the Supreme Court, many supporters of the bill known as DOMA believed that its passage "would defuse a movement to enact a constitutional amendment banning gay marriage, which would have ended the debate for a generation or more." It was under these circumstances that DOMA came to my desk, opposed by only 81 of the 535 members of Congress.

On March 27, DOMA will come before the Supreme Court, and the justices must decide whether it is consistent with the principles of a nation that honors freedom, equality and justice above all, and is therefore constitutional. As the president who signed the act into law, I have come to believe that DOMA is contrary to those principles and, in fact, incompatible with our Constitution.

Because Section 3 of the act defines marriage as being between a man and a woman, same-sex couples who are legally married in nine states and the District of Columbia are denied the benefits of more than a thousand federal statutes and programs available to other married couples. Among other things, these couples cannot file their taxes jointly, take unpaid leave to care for a sick or injured spouse or receive equal family health and pension benefits as federal civilian employees. Yet they pay taxes, contribute to their communities and, like all couples, aspire to live in committed, loving relationships, recognized and respected by our laws.

When I signed the bill, I included a statement with the admonition that “enactment of this legislation should not, despite the fierce and at times divisive rhetoric surrounding it, be understood to provide an excuse for discrimination.” Reading those words today, I know now that, even worse than providing an excuse for discrimination, the law is itself discriminatory. It should be overturned.

We are still a young country, and many of our landmark civil rights decisions are fresh enough that the voices of their champions still echo, even as the world that preceded them becomes less and less familiar. We have yet to celebrate the centennial of the 19th Amendment, but a society that denied women the vote would seem to us now not unusual or old-fashioned but alien. I believe that in 2013 DOMA and opposition to marriage equality are vestiges of just such an unfamiliar society.

Americans have been at this sort of a crossroads often enough to recognize the right path. We understand that, while our laws may at times lag behind our best natures, in the end they catch up to our core values. One hundred fifty years ago, in the midst of the Civil War, President Abraham Lincoln concluded a message to Congress by posing the very question we face today: “It is not ‘Can any of us imagine better?’ but ‘Can we all do better’?”

The answer is of course and always yes. In that spirit, I join with the Obama administration, the petitioner Edith Windsor, and the many other dedicated men and women who have engaged in this struggle for decades in urging the Supreme Court to overturn the Defense of Marriage Act.

Think all of us are getting incoming from friends in LGBT community about DOMA comments.

HuffPo has reached out to us. I heard from Socarides that NYT was doing something.

I have no understanding of the issue – but clear this has a head of steam.

Brian can put a statement out, but policy and political need to tell us what you want us to do.

I would suggest a conference call with relevant parties for how we are going to handle all around – press, groups, politics. I have a bad schedule for rest of day and may not be able to be on such a call but don't think I am needed. We just need guidance and then on political end think we need a plan for how to hose down anxious friends.

I believe you are joining the board of the giant energy funder that Packard is part of? Is there a meeting soon?

I met with her in late July and we had a great, long conversation on a range of topics, including our China/energy work (for which they seem prime targets). If you see her in Geneva (right?) - can you say good things about CAP -both in energy and repro health (where we really need the money too).

Thanks!

Big Labor-Backed Group To Unleash Massive Mail Blitz In Swing States Tying McCain To Bush

By Greg Sargent - September 17, 2008, 2:53PM

The AFL-CIO and an affiliated independent group are preparing to unleash an unusually large blitz of mailers targeting at least 1.5 million households in battleground states and across the country -- the group's first foray in a new and all-out campaign to win back Reagan and Bush-supporting Dems in the race's final stretch.

The mailer, which we obtained in advance of its public release, features testimonials from a number of these workers, including a school bus driver and Marine veteran who articulates the campaign's core message: "I voted for George W. Bush because he promised to change Washington. I'm not falling for the same old line from John McCain."

The mailer is the first big move by an outside group called Working America, which gets funding from the AFL-CIO and is the union's affiliate for non-union workers.

Working America is a group that bears watching. It's going to be doing a fair amount of heavy-lifting when it comes to winning back blue-collar "Reagan Democrats" who supported Bush in 2004 and risk being seduced by McCain's claim to being the race's real change agent -- hence the mailer's message.

Working America and the AFL-CIO will blast out the mailer next week to some 270,000 households in the swing states of Ohio, Pennsylvania, and Michigan, and to another 1.3 million union households in those states and across the country.

"This is a new front in the effort to reach working-class moderates on the pocketbook issues that are critical to them this election year," Karen Nussbaum, Executive Director of Working America, tells us.

"Our members have seen their living standards decline, their communities decay and their economic security disappear," Nussbaum continues. "Yet John McCain still thinks the fundamentals of our economy are strong."

The group -- which claims 2.5 million members in 11 states, including 800,000 in Ohio alone -- plans more mailers and on-the-ground organizing in the weeks ahead.

It has been reported that the State Department rejected a consultancy the president proposed with Saban Capital Group. Is that so? Or was there never a formal objection from State to that arrangement? Did it go forward?

Who paid the expenses associated with President Clinton's travel to Israel in December 2009 to speak at the Saban Forum?

The travel expenses were paid for by Haim Saban.

It appears that the ethics agreement the Clintons set in place in 2009, in intent and/or practice, resulted in a lower standard for conflicts of interest or appearances of such with respect to the foundation as opposed to private business arrangements with President Clinton. In other words, some donors were acceptable to donate to the foundation but not to enter into business arrangements with President Clinton. What's the rationale for that distinction?

Thanks so much for the changes. I think this is much stronger.

One point about last night's debate. You say "fourteen of them on the same stage" -- but they were largely interviewed one at a time and a couple were on satellite from DC. So I'd just go with the number.

thanks!

Subject: REVISED DRAFT: Talking points for tonight in Colorado

Good morning all -- here are revised bullets for this evening. I think they do everything we discussed.

Three things:

1. At the top, instead of writing out entire riffs that she knows backward and forward from the stump, we just put in the main tent-pole sentences, to leave the rest to her. You'll see.
2. The "right to rise" immigration hit is different -- take a look.
3. Added a few sentences on the Voting Rights Act.

HRC is departing earlier than planned this morning so I'll have to send her a revised version in the next 1.5 hours or so. So please send me any edits asap. (If you miss this window, the event isn't until tonight so we'll have time for important changes today.)

Thank you all for your invaluable guidance!

At any rate, it is the only way we make any news for the rest of the week. If folks have another formulation to hit Jeb on immigration that break through, that is great. Otherwise I think we stick with right to rise.

Dear Knox Trustees,

The October 2014 (Fall) meeting of the Knox College Board of Trustees will be held on Thursday and Friday, October 9-10, 2014, in Galesburg. Attached please find the call memo and a draft of the meeting schedule. The meeting materials will be posted on the Trustee web site approximately one week prior to the Board meeting.

Also attached is a reservation form. Due to the high demand for hotel accommodations on Homecoming weekend, I ask that you return the form to me by September 10, 2014. Thanks in advance for your cooperation.

We are planning to have an event for spouses/partners on Friday, October 10. More details will be forthcoming. In the meantime, please don't hesitate to contact me with questions.

Best regards,
Denise

John -

I depend on VA care after exposure to Agent Orange during my service in Vietnam.

So, as a Kentuckian, I was disappointed with my Senator, Mitch McConnell, for his role in blocking improvements to veterans' health care during a time of crisis earlier this year.

And when VoteVets asked me to share my story in a television ad set to air across Kentucky starting today, I immediately agreed.

Subject: A note of appreciation for your continued government service

Hope you and Mary are well.

I write to express deep appreciation for your most recent stint in the White House. Even from afar it was obvious the issues you worked on, because the purpose of government intervention was clear, the facts well and fairly stated and the policy prescriptions offered were coherent and designed to be effective. Your ability to manage and lead from a role as Chief of Staff was a joy to witness, but in your most recent role you had a set of new and difficult challenges that you seemed to easily overcome.

Unlike most folks who write to ask for favors I have nothing to request. I support Hilary in her effort -- once she is official -- and would be glad to help in whatever modest way I can. But, again I do not need to feel like I am part of any inner circle or the like. Rather my commitment is to you and a sincere offer to lighten your burden as you proceed in the next stage of your life.

For me SF has been an oasis of fun, family and opportunity. Elizabeth has had a remarkably long set of health issues -- including some life threatening ones -- but seems on the mend as of late. My daughters, Genna and Ellis, both live and work in the Bay area. Genna is an admitted to practice immigration lawyer and Ellis is working for communications/PR firm that has mostly health care companies, and non-profit patient groups as clients.

My professional life remains interesting. In addition to venture capital work I have been able to keep busy with: (1) volunteer projects for the Chancellors of both Berkeley and UCSF, (2) a State Commission (appointed by Jerry Brown) on reorganizing State Government, (3) teaching as an adjunct at the Business School at Berkeley, and (4) some interesting work at the Center for Global Enterprise (www.thecge.net) (a non-profit think tank founded by ex-IBM CEO Sam Palmisano to conduct research and develop best practices for how to being a truly global company with the primary audience being CEOs from emerging markets or newer technology platform firms).

Again congratulation on all you have done. Please stay in touch, especially if you will be in SF or en route to you CA home.

2016 Polls Show Clinton Leads in Key States, GOP Field Wide Open (NBC News)

By Mark Murray

February 15, 2015

NBC News

Less than a year before the first presidential contests begin, a trio of new NBC News/Marist polls show that the Republican race is wide open in the early nominating states of Iowa, New Hampshire and South Carolina.

In fact, seven different possible Republican candidates get double-digit support in at least one of the states. But only two candidates — former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush and Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker — are in double digits in all three states.

The early betting line for these critical states “points to a rough-and-tumble Republican nomination battle,” says pollster Lee Miringoff, director of the Marist College Institute for Public Opinion.

In Iowa, former Arkansas Gov. Mike Huckabee leads the GOP pack getting support from 17 percent of potential Republican caucus-goers, followed by Bush at 16 percent, Walker at 15 percent, New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie at 9 percent and Sen. Rand Paul, R-Ky., at 7 percent.

In New Hampshire, Bush gets support from 18 percent of potential GOP primary voters, followed by Walker at 15 percent, Paul at 14 percent and Christie at 13 percent.

And in South Carolina, it's native son Sen. Lindsey Graham, R-S.C., at 17 percent, Bush at 15 percent, Walker at 12 percent, and Huckabee and retired neurosurgeon Ben Carson tied at 10 percent.

Clinton holds a substantial lead in the early states

By comparison, the Democratic nomination contest is much less competitive in these three states. In Iowa, former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton leads Vice President Joe Biden by more than 50 points, 68 percent to 12 percent.

She's ahead of Sen. Bernie Sanders, I-Vt., by the same margin in New Hampshire, 69 percent to 13 percent.

And in South Carolina, Clinton has a 45-point advantage over Biden, 65 percent to 20 percent.

The NBC/Marist polls did not include Sen. Elizabeth Warren, D-Mass., in these trial heats because she continues to insist — in both the present and future tenses — that she won't be running for president in 2016.

All of the possible candidates that the polls measured either have formed committees to explore a run, have begun to hire staff, or at least have left open the possibility of a White House bid.

An early look at the general election

In hypothetical general-election matchups among registered voters, Clinton leads both Bush and Walker in the battlegrounds of Iowa and New Hampshire.

In Iowa, Clinton holds an eight-point advantage over Bush, 48 percent to 40 percent, and an 11-point edge over Walker, 49 percent to 38 percent.

In New Hampshire, Clinton is up by six points over Bush (48 percent to 42 percent) and seven points over Walker (49 percent to 42 percent).

And in the GOP-leaning state of South Carolina, Bush leads Clinton by three points, 48 percent to 45 percent. And Walker ties her at 46 percent each.

While Clinton is ahead in Iowa and New Hampshire, President Barack Obama isn't much of an asset for her in these two states, with his job-approval rating at 43 percent in both.

Obama's job rating is one point higher in South Carolina, at 44 percent.

Testing the most acceptable and least acceptable issues

The NBC/Marist polls also tested seven key issues — supporting Common Core, supporting a pathway to citizenship for undocumented immigrants, wanting to repeal the federal health-care law, believing that climate change is man-made, opposing gay marriage, favoring raising taxes on the wealthy and wanting to send more U.S. troops to combat ISIS — to see which were the most acceptable and unacceptable to voters in these three states.

The most acceptable among all registered voters and Democrats: a candidate who wants to raise taxes on the wealthy.

The least acceptable among all registered voters and Democrats: a candidate who opposes same-sex marriage.

The most acceptable among Republican voters: a candidate who wants to repeal the health-care law.

The least acceptable among Republicans: believing climate change is man-made (in Iowa and South Carolina) and raising taxes on the wealthy (New Hampshire).

Paul's sharp Valentine to Hillary Clinton (The Hill)

By Niall Stanage

Sen. Rand Paul (R-Ky.) sent Hillary Clinton a distinctly double-edged Valentine's Day gift Saturday when he tweeted out a mock Pinterest page jabbing at the former secretary of State.

Paul's tweet made clear he was kidding.

However, some of the Pinterest jokes were a little close to the bone.

One, for instance, from a board ostensibly showing "Inspirational Quotes," has an image of a gleeful Clinton, a large red heart and the words, "I've Benghaziing at you!"

Another, from the same board, includes a photo of Clinton, a quote sometimes attributed to the real Clinton ("There are no other people's children") and the fake-Clinton caption, "Because children belong to the government. #ForTheChildren."

Other boards and images include titles such as "White House remodel" in reference to Clinton's assumed aspiration to return as president to the building where she lived as first lady; and "Should, Woulda, Coulda," which mostly features images of Clinton campaigning with Democrats who failed to win their Senate races last November.

Paul has mined that final seam before. In the immediate wake of the election, Paul also took to social media — on that occasion, his Facebook page — and referred to the defeated Democrats with the hashtag #HillarysLosers

It is widely assumed that both Paul and Clinton will run for the presidency in 2016, so these may be just the first shots in a social media war.

At time of writing, no fire had been returned from Clinton's official Twitter account.

Rand Paul mocks Hillary Clinton with parody Pinterest page (MSNBC)

In honor of Valentine's Day, Sen. Rand Paul is having some pointed fun at Hillary Clinton's expense.

The Kentucky senator tweeted out a link Saturday to a parody Pinterest page that uses some tired anti-Hillary tropes to lampoon the potential Democratic presidential nominee.

"Hillary Clinton's new Valentine's Day Pinterest board is worth a look," wrote Paul. "Check it out and please RT!"

The Pinterest page, which uses the same profile image as Clinton's genuine Twitter account, includes pictures on themes that figure to be prominent Republican attack lines should Clinton pursue the 2016 Democratic nomination for president: among them Clinton's ties to President Obama; anxiety over the prospect of Bill Clinton's return to the White House; and of course, Benghazi.

The stunt may seem light-hearted, but it has a serious intent: to bolster Paul's brand as a tech-savvy Republican who can appeal to young voters; to keep him in the spotlight as other potential GOP candidates like Jeb Bush and Scott Walker threaten to eclipse him; and to court conservatives by going after a perennial favorite target of the right.

It isn't the first time Paul has taken to social media to mock the former first lady. After last November's midterms, he sent out a series of tweets that used the hashtag #HillarysLosers and showed pictures of Clinton appearing with Democratic Senate candidates who'd just been defeated.

A spokesman for Paul didn't immediately respond to a request for comment on the Pinterest page.

The Hill

Sen. Rand Paul (R-Ky.) is adopting an old tactic of Hillary Clinton's, making a habit of working across the aisle ahead of a presidential election.

Paul, a likely presidential candidate in 2016, has sponsored bills with Democratic colleagues on topics ranging from criminal justice reform to fiscal oversight of the Pentagon, apparently in an effort to broaden his appeal.

He could be helped in this regard by his overall worldview. Paul sees interventionism overseas and government surveillance at home through a skeptical lens, a position that is more common, overall, on the left than the right.

Still, Paul is best known to many people as a leader of the 2010 Tea Party revolution. Others recall that one of the first media firestorms he ignited was centered on his complicated view of the 1964 Civil Rights Act.

Conspicuous teamwork with Democrats in Congress could help him appeal to independents in next year's primaries and in the general election.

This week, Paul introduced legislation with Senate Democratic Leader Harry Reid (D-Nev.) to restore federal voting rights to non-violent offenders who have been released from prison.

Last week, he unveiled a bill with Sen. Patrick Leahy (Vt.), the senior Democrat on the Judiciary Committee, to give federal judges more discretion to hand out sentences below the requirements of mandatory minimums.

Paul and Sen. Barbara Boxer (D-Calif.), one of the most liberal members of the Democratic caucus, last month announced a proposal to extend the Highway Trust Fund by giving companies a tax incentive to repatriate overseas profits.

In her time in the Senate, Hillary Clinton sponsored an array of bipartisan bills, with an eye on fashioning a pragmatic image after years of being seen as a hyper-partisan figure.

In the summer of 2006, for example, she co-sponsored, with former Sen. Robert Bennett (R-Utah), a proposed constitutional amendment to ban desecration of the American flag that came within one vote of passing the Senate.

And such efforts are not wholly confined to the past for Clinton, who is preparing for another likely White House run in 2016.

Just this week, she joined forces with former Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist (R-Tenn.) to publish an op-ed in The New York Times urging Congress to extend the Children's Health Insurance Program.

Political experts say Paul's effort to defy ideological stereotypes could pay off in next year's primaries as well as in the general election.

"Paul wants to appeal to people who have low party identification," said Al Cross, a longtime Kentucky political columnist. "A lot of voters like candidates who think outside the box and kind of cross party lines and get something done.

"It's mainly about the primary," he added. "It's more of a New Hampshire strategy than anything else."

In New Hampshire, independents make up more than 40 percent of the electorate and they're allowed to vote in either the Republican or the Democratic primary.

Showing an ability to work across party lines could also help Paul pick up Democratic votes in other important open-primary states such as Michigan and South Carolina.

It's not a unique approach, even among Republicans. New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie (R), a centrist who might have trouble winning conservative votes, has made a point of visiting almost every state with an open primary.

Paul has a solid base among Tea Party conservatives and libertarians thanks to his father, former Rep. Ron Paul (R-Texas), who ran for president three times — once on the Libertarian ticket and twice as a libertarian-leaning Republican.

But merely replicating his father's showings would leave the Kentucky senator a long way short of the presidency.

"It looks to me as if he's trying to position himself to go a step beyond where his father was. His father, whom I know and like, spent much of his life trying to build a libertarian movement but never really in my view contemplated becoming president," said Vin Weber, a Republican strategist who served as a senior advisor to Mitt Romney's 2012 presidential campaign.

Paul is making an argument about his electability in a general election by portraying himself as a conservative who can win over voters in the middle and even pick off members of core Democratic constituencies, such as African Americans.

“We need a bigger party,” Paul told a group of Republicans in South Carolina last year. “We need to reach out to people where they are. We need to be more diverse and look more like the American people. The message has to be broadened to reach more people.”

“If you look at the field, there are a lot of people vying for the base or the Tea Party end of the party without thinking about the middle. He’s thinking beyond the primary,” said Jennifer Duffy, senior editor at The Cook Political Report.

“He needs to sort of fix the reputation he brought to the Senate,” she added. “He was [thought of as] very extreme, that he was a Tea Party guy.”

“What Paul really wants to be is a guy who’s not easily defined,” she added.

Paul suggested in several 2010 interviews that the 1964 Civil Rights Act went too far in prohibiting private businesses from using racially discriminatory practices, even though he personally condemned such conduct.

He also said at the time that he would have voted for the law and has contested any attempt to describe him as an opponent as a “mischaracterization.”

Paul has since made a direct appeal to African-American voters by sponsoring a handful of bills aimed at criminal justice reform.

He and Sen. Cory Booker (D-N.J.) have co-sponsored legislation that would help adults seal non-violent criminal records and automatically expunge the records of juvenile offenders who commit non-violent crimes before turning 15.

“It’s particularly smart because of the strict libertarian position with [regard] to the 1964 Civil Rights Act. If he became identified with that point of view, which has surfaced every now and then, that’s death in more places than in just the African American [community],” Weber said.

Paul and Sen. Angus King (Maine), an independent who caucuses with Democrats, both support the FAIR Act, which would protect citizens from police seizures of property without due process of law. Paul argues asset forfeiture laws hit minorities disproportionately.

Last month, he and Sen. Ron Wyden (D-Ore.) introduced legislation calling for an audit of the Pentagon. Sen. Ted Cruz (R-Texas), another 2016 hopeful, also co-sponsored the measure.

How To Handle Hillary Haters (Daily Beast)

By Gil Troy

February 15, 2015

Daily Beast

If, in the 1960s, paranoids yelled, “The Russians are coming,” today’s more credible cry should be, “the Hillary haters are coming.” As the most famous Hillary convert David Brock squabbles with former Barack Obama supporters over control of Hillary Clinton’s shadow presidential campaign, the Hillary haters are crawling out from under their rocks. Since she became a national figure in 1992, Hillary Rodham Clinton has been one of the most famous, yet polarizing, Americans.

In fairness, Hillary Clinton earned some of the enmity. Especially when pressured, she and her husband have shown a tendency to, ahem, “misremember” that makes Brian Williams look like George Washington. Her awkwardness and insecurity in 1992 and 1993 made it worse, as she often sounded like a stereotypical feminist hostile to traditional women and values. Still, in an era that is particularly hard on politicians, be it Al Gore, Bill Clinton, and Barack Obama on the left or Sarah Palin, George W. Bush, and Dick Cheney on the right, Hillary hatred has been particularly virulent and irrational.

While the Arkansas animus against the Yankee feminist living in the Governor’s Mansion harks back to the 1980s, Hillary bashing as a national sport began on January 26, 1992. That night, after Super Bowl XXVI, Bill and Hillary Clinton appeared on a special “Sixty Minutes” to refute charges that were true about Bill Clinton’s unfaithfulness.

Understanding that his candidacy’s survival depended on her vouching for him, millions of Americans first met Hillary Clinton as she requested a zone of privacy. Mrs. Clinton offended millions of traditionalists—and country music fans—by saying, “I’m not sitting here like some little woman standin’ by my man, like Tammy Wynette.” Two months later, Clinton triggered more cultural alarms by boasting that while “I could have stayed home and baked cookies and had teas,” she mastered a profession instead.

Hillary Clinton’s prickly rhetoric made her easily cast as the ultimate “feminazi,” the “yuppie wife from hell,” the harsh Northeastern careerist know-it-all. The sexual panic this caricature of her engendered could be seen in all the contradictory rumors about her, that she was at once frigid, a lesbian, and a heterosexual adulterer herself. To opponents, Hillary Clinton represented Bill Clinton’s “McGovernik” tendencies, in Newt Gingrich’s memorable label, absorbing all the anxieties about the Baby Boomers, the Sixties, and Bill Clinton’s genuinely liberal pedigree and supposedly liberal master plan.

When the Clintons’ initial talk of a “co-presidency” involved her both in the health care reform debacle and a series of scandals from Travelgate to Whitewater, the traditional rumor mill became a post-modern, 24/7 media-fueled industry. In December 1993, David Brock’s infamous “Troopergate” article exposing Bill Clinton’s Arkansas philandering portrayed Hillary Clinton as unloved and unlovable. The article ultimately led to the Paula Jones lawsuit, which provided the legal foundation for Bill Clinton’s 1998 impeachment—and launched Brock’s long quest for liberal redemption for serving as a Right Wing Hit Man.

With the Internet just emerging as a perpetual scandal-generator, Hillary-hating initially flourished thanks to magazines like Brock’s American Spectator, Talk Radio, tabloid newspapers, and sensation-seeking 24/7 television news networks. Once, Rush Limbaugh broadcast a claim that the Clintons’ friend Vince Foster was murdered in an apartment Hillary Clinton owned. When the charge proved to be false, Limbaugh shrugged. “That’s what it said in the Fax,” he said, and began his next tirade.

As First Lady, Hillary Clinton also absorbed a more traditional hostility that other activist First Ladies have stirred, when they were perceived as controlling, manipulative Lady Macbeths trying to seize power through pillow talk. The similar sexist caricatures mocking such dissimilar women as Hillary Clinton, Nancy Reagan and Eleanor Roosevelt, suggests the anxiety was cultural and institutional not just personal. Like Reagan and Roosevelt, Bill Clinton was a particularly charming, elusive president whose less popular, less slippery First Lady served conveniently as a lightning rod.

While that hostility to Hillary the power-hungry radical persists, three critical shifts have diminished it. First, Hillary Clinton became a more passive, more traditional First Lady. That distance served her well during the Monica Lewinsky sex scandal, when millions of American women softened their impressions of her. Being pitied as a victim rather than respected as a powerhouse rankled this talented, intelligent, modern woman. Nevertheless, Clinton parlayed that sympathy into a revolutionary rehabilitative jump into traditional electoral politics, running for Senate in 2000 as Hillary!—with her campaign posters preferring an exclamation point to her last name.

As New York’s junior senator, Hillary Clinton confounded her critics. No longer vulnerable to accusations of trying to commandeer power through marriage, she was now a legitimate player with a real job on the political scene. And despite Hillary’s reputation as a radical lesbian liberal feminist, in 2008 Barack Obama ran to her left.

As a senator in her mid-fifties—and a national icon known by her first name, like Cher or Madonna—Hillary also now felt more secure. Senator Clinton played against her celebrity, showing a humility and respect for seniority that charmed senators and voters. The warm, down-to-earth side her friends saw but many voters did not in the 1990s emerged.

The most astounding shift occurred during the searing 2008 Democratic primary campaign. The white working class men who had often detested Hillary with a particular Limbaughian Rush of bile, became her base in Ohio and Pennsylvania. Cynics believe these “bitter” Middle Americans, who “cling to guns or religion or antipathy to others who are not like them”—in Obama’s infamous phrasing—were more racist than sexist. Actually, the connection went deeper. In those primaries, a more empathetic and visionary Hillary Clinton was running for a cause not just to advance herself or her husband. After winning West Virginia in May 2008, she vowed to continue campaigning “for the nurse on her second shift, for the worker on the line, for the waitress on her feet, for the small-business owner, the farmer, the teacher, the coal miner, the trucker, the soldier, the veteran.”

Here, then, is the critical lesson Hillary Clinton must master. The noise will grow, with Benghazi being played as a conspiracy that was her fault rather than a crime terrorists committed, with her aide Huma Abedin accused of being both a Muslim Brotherhood operative and Hillary’s lesbian lover, etc., etc., etc. Googling “Hillary Clinton” and “lesbian” already generates over 5.6 million hits.

But most Americans have given Hillary Clinton—and her husband—the benefit of the doubt when the Clintons focused on substance not celebrity. She needs to be fighting for something, not asserting a claim. She should stand for principle not peddle her fame—or her feeling that she deserves it. “It’s my time” talk will not play as well as “It’s time to act” talk. Foolishly, during her recent memoir rollout she traded on her personality, and wallowed in self-pity, unconsciously emphasizing how different she is from most Americans by claiming to be one of them in an area where she isn’t—net worth.

Hillary Clinton has to make the case that her presidency will accomplish something, despite the sniping. Many Americans will tolerate the negatives, if they believe there is something positive to be achieved. But if this campaign is just to add another line to the collective Clinton resume, enduring the inevitable Hillary Bashing won’t be worth it—perhaps even for her as well as for us.

The mastermind of Obama's political ascent (WAPO)

By David J. Garrow

February 15, 2015

The Washington Post

David J. Garrow is the author of "Bearing the Cross," a Pulitzer Prize-winning biography of Martin Luther King Jr. His next book, "Rising Star: The Making of Barack Obama," will be published in the winter of 2016-17.

David Axelrod's "Believer" is a likable enough political memoir. Neither Barack Obama nor Hillary Rodham Clinton will find a single embarrassing anecdote among its pages. Indeed, anyone interested in Axelrod's long career as a successful political consultant may wonder, as an earlier presidential contender once asked, "Where's the beef?" The answer, obvious even to readers who are not Walter Mondale or Gary Hart, is that "Believer" is a totally vegan entree, a warm and nutritious puree containing hardly a single tasty morsel.

The big news in "Believer" is that Susan Axelrod, the author's spouse, is a truly wonderful, wonderful, wonderful wife and mother. Beyond that, notable revelations are few and far between. Jesse Jackson Sr. can be "a shameless hustler and relentless self-promoter." Yawn. Obama views snarky New York Times columnist Maureen Dowd with deep "contempt" and was "patronizing and disrespectful" to her during a brief conversation. Big whoop. Michelle Obama has "frustrations" that can "boil over" and once "slugged my arm, and not in a playful way." She could have aimed higher.

President Obama's first chief of staff, Rahm Emanuel, was so "desperate" to keep first friend Valerie Jarrett out of the White House that he avidly sought her appointment to Obama's vacant Senate seat. Astonishing. The impressive Chicago house the Obamas purchased in 2005 is a "mansion," and "Barack felt he owed Michelle the home" after eight years as a political-absentee husband and father. Remarkable. President Obama was still "surreptitiously" smoking and would go to "farcical lengths" to hide it. Unbelievable. Obama calls Axelrod a four-syllable obscenity and walks out after his debating skills are critiqued the night before his awful 2012 performance against Mitt Romney. Wow! Barack Obama, thin-skinned and petulant? Who'da thunk it!

Axelrod can be self-revealing as well as self-critical. He admits to suffering from "debilitating self-doubt," understandable indeed for someone with a mother who often paid him no heed and a father who committed suicide while Axelrod was an undergraduate at the University of Chicago. As a young, married journalist at the Chicago Tribune, one whose eldest child was suffering from severe epilepsy, "I far too often ditched my responsibilities as a husband and a father." In 1984, Axelrod switched sides to become a campaign consultant, but he once disparaged his mentor, Sen. Paul Simon, as "an aspiring hack trapped in a reformer's body."

His daughter's illness "placed a great strain on our family" and led him to decline a 1992 offer to be Democratic presidential nominee Bill Clinton's communications director. "This great opportunity would likely destroy my family. It was a watershed moment in my life." Axelrod oversaw some campaigns he chooses not to mention, confessing that he was "proud of many (though by no means all) of my clients." He offers a highly incomplete account of why he declined to undertake Obama's ill-advised 1999-2000 challenge to Democratic Rep. Bobby Rush.

Concerning his late-2002 agreement to take on Obama's Senate race, Axelrod interestingly writes that "Obama offered a path back to the ideals that had drawn me to politics in the first place." He adds a pro-forma denial of complicity in the perfectly timed document-dump that took down one of Obama's top primary opponents while embracing what he calls Obama's "pragmatic willingness to do what was necessary in the heat of battle."

Come 2006, Axelrod advised Obama to be the antithesis of George W. Bush, whom voters saw as "hyper-partisan, ideological and unyielding." Boy, does that memo echo differently eight years later to observers who might apply the same terms to Obama himself! Axelrod seemingly apologizes for some of the charges that Obama's campaign flung at Hillary Clinton, writing that "the attacks we wielded against her would look even more dubious in the full blush of history." He also states that some of Obama's 2008 primary defeats were Axelrod's fault, acknowledging that "I had made some poor judgments."

During the fall 2008 race against Republican John McCain, Obama rallies that displayed "a cult-of-personality quality" worried both Axelrod and his candidate. "We may be the victims of our own success," Axelrod recounts Obama telling him. "The expectations are so high. It's going to be really hard to meet them."

The final third of "Believer," covering Obama's years as president, is the most mundane portion of the book. Complaining that "Rahm wanted Obama out in public constantly," Axelrod presciently worried about the cumulative impact of "overexposure and too many B-level press events."

Only twice does "Believer" relate comments whose inclusion may be more purposeful than their immersion in Axelrod's bland puree might otherwise suggest. One occurs in 1991, when Axelrod quotes Al Hofeld, a now-little-remembered Senate candidate, as warning that "we won't get national health care until we're ready to take on the insurance lobby" and "we won't get guns off our streets until we're ready to take on the NRA." Prescience indeed!

The second comment has immediate relevance. "Believer" is appearing shortly after Obama proposed a $4 trillion 2016 budget, including a $474 billion annual deficit, while decrying what he termed "mindless austerity." But back in early 2009, Axelrod recounts, Obama told him that "before we're done, we have to do something about the deficits. I don't want to leave the next president the kind of mess they handed to us." How might the Obama of 2015 respond if confronted by the Obama of 2009? What was that signature campaign slogan he and Axelrod made famous? "Yes, we can!"

For Jeb Bush, family name is one thing, but policy is another (WAPO)

By Philip Rucker

February 15, 2015

The Washington Post

BONITA SPRINGS, Fla. - Jeb Bush came here this weekend to bask in the glow of his extended family. His sister called him "remarkable and brilliant," a president-in-waiting. His mother said she had changed her mind, that it was time after all for another Bush in the White House. And his father, the 41st president, cheered him on.

Yet even as Bush embraced his dynastic family as relatives, he tried not to get saddled by them as politicians. When a reporter asked how he might have handled differently his brother's unpopular wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, Bush said: "I won't talk about the past; I'll talk about the future. . . . It's not about re-litigating anything in the past."

But it won't be so easy to escape the burdens of being a Bush. Wrestling with how to handle the legacies of the two previous, controversial presidents in the family, Bush and his advisers say one of his foremost challenges will be to establish his own political identity distinct from theirs, just as he did in two successful campaigns for governor in Florida.

The campaign stickers his supporters wore back then, and which they are sporting anew these days, say "Jeb!" with no hint of the Bush name that comes after.

There are other ways the Bush team thinks the Jeb brand could be unique. His father, George H.W. Bush, governed as a free-spending, tax-raising, foreign-policy pragmatist, while Jeb Bush aims to offer himself as a small-government conservative reformer motivated chiefly by domestic concerns.

Where older brother George W. Bush was widely regarded as an incurious and at times inept executive, Jeb Bush believes he might appeal to voters as a competent and detail-oriented leader with wonkish curiosity and a zest for big ideas.

The 41st president presented himself as an patrician patriot and public servant, while the 43rd styled himself as a brush-clearing cowboy with Texas bravado. The Bush who hopes to become the 45th president thinks he can do so by portraying himself as the embodiment of modern America's cultural melange: a fluent Spanish speaker and Catholic convert who married a Mexican immigrant, made Miami his home and preaches a gospel of inclusion and opportunity.

"Those who have reached premature conclusions about 'the Bushes' will be disarmed when, through the course of the campaign, they come to realize who the real Jeb Bush is and how similar their goals and aspirations are to his," said Al Cardenas, a Bush friend and political adviser for three decades.

As a scion of the most powerful family in Republican politics, Bush, 62, has clear advantages, namely a vast and loyal network of donors, policy gurus, operatives and grass-roots activists he has begun to mobilize. He is far ahead of his would-be rivals in fundraising, with the possibility of raising as much as $100 million by spring.

But his family associations also bring significant challenges and risks. George H.W. Bush lost his reelection campaign and was blamed for a weak economy, while George W. Bush left office in 2009 amid the Great Recession with a dismal approval rating of 34 percent. Both times, Democrats have been elected to fix the problems - in the case of the former, it was Bill Clinton, whose wife Jeb Bush could face in the 2016 general election.

Time has brought a renaissance of warm feelings for the elder Bush in particular, but the brutality of a presidential campaign will test that. Already, Democrats are trying to saddle Jeb Bush with his brother's record, both domestic and foreign, including the deeply unpopular Iraq war.

"It's not that he shares his brother's last name, it's that he shares his brother's economic worldview, that he shares his brother's commitment to helping the wealthiest at the expense of everybody else," said Mo Elleithee, communications director for the Democratic National Committee. "Does his last name help make that connection? We can make that connection without it - and we will."

Elleithee said that a rare joint interview the Bush brothers did with CNN in 2010 provides ammunition. In it, Jeb Bush said: "I'm the only Republican that was in office when he was in office as president that never disagreed with him. . . . It's just, till death do us part."

Jeb - an acronym of his full name, John Ellis Bush - acknowledges the challenge.

"If I have any degree of self-awareness, this would be the place where it might want to be applied," he said in a Feb. 4 appearance in Detroit.

In his gubernatorial races, Bush said, "I wasn't just the brother of George W. and the son of my beloved dad. I was my own person. I earned it by working hard to connect with people on a level that truly mattered. That experience on a national scale has got to be part of the strategy.”

Ana Navarro, a Bush friend and adviser, said, “The minute he walks into a room and opens his mouth, people will realize how simplistic it is to imply that he’s reading off some sort of Bush family instruction manual.”

So far, Bush is attempting to use his family name as an advantage, developing familiarity with his audiences by joshing about famous relatives.

At a commencement address in December, he told an oft-repeated joke about his mother, Barbara, the notably brusque former first lady. He said he sought her advice about what to tell the graduates and she told him, “Jeb, speak for about 10 minutes and then sit down and shut up.”

In San Francisco last month, Bush lit up the crowd when he invoked another, less-known sibling: “A lot of people ask about my brother. . . . Since you asked, Marvin is doing spectacularly well.”

In Bonita Springs on Friday night, Bush joined relatives for the Barbara Bush Foundation’s annual charity dinner celebrating literacy. As he addressed attendees, Bush recalled his mother’s 2013 remark that “we’ve had enough Bushes” in the White House.

At that, Barbara Bush popped up on two jumbo screens via Skype.

“Jeb!” she interrupted him. “Jeb, it’s Mom. Listen, what do you mean, too many Bushes? . . . I changed my mind!” The nation’s problems are so big, she said, “it doesn’t matter what your last name is.”

“Hey, Mom,” he replied, “can I get that in writing?”

Polls reveal a harsh distaste for dynasties, and this extends into the Democratic Party as well, where former secretary of state Hillary Rodham Clinton, the wife of a former president, is the presumed front-runner.

At a January focus group with voters in the swing state of Colorado, participants had a viscerally negative reaction to the idea of another President Bush. “No, thank you,” one said. “Again?” asked another.

Sen. Rand Paul (Ky.), also a likely GOP presidential candidate, has attacked Bush over the dynasty issue. His political action committee last month released a fake phone call between Bush and Clinton. “Hillary, there hasn’t been a Republican White House without a Bush since 1977, and we’re ready to be back,” a Bush impersonator says.

“There is understandable resistance among American voters to the notion of political dynasties,” said Mark McKinnon, a campaign adviser to George W. Bush. But, he added, “if you do happen to be part of a dynasty, what better time to run than when there is one running for the other party’s nomination.”

The Bush family is sensitive to any suggestion that Jeb’s lineage entitles him to the GOP nomination, much less the presidency. Family members also are sensitive to comparisons being made among Jeb and his brother and father - and they are, in the words of one aide, “dismissive of the psychobabble.”

In Detroit, Bush said, “I’m pretty proud of 41 and 43. . . . I know that’s hard for the political world to accept, but it’s pretty easy for me to love them, and I love them unconditionally. Now the therapists can opine about that.”

Both former presidents Bush are said to be energized about Jeb Bush’s likely campaign, and they fully expect him to differentiate himself in substance and style.

“It’s not like there are these big family dinners where they all decide who’s going to plot out which position on which issue,” said Jim McGrath, the longtime spokesman for George H.W. Bush. “It’s assumed that you’ll cut your own path, be your own man and run on your own ideas.”

In 1998, when Jeb Bush was running for his first term as governor, the elder Bush wrote a letter to him and to George W. Bush, then the governor of Texas, both running that year for reelection:

“At some point, both of you may want to say, ‘Well, I don’t agree with my Dad on that point’ or ‘Frankly I think Dad was wrong on that.’ Do it. Chart your own course, not just on the issues but on defining yourselves.”

Jeb Bush followed his father’s advice. In his 1998 campaign, he created his own identity by focusing on Florida-specific issues. He visited some 250 schools to promote state education reform, for example.

“He was the only Bush in Florida at the time, so for him, it was an open field,” said Justin Sayfie, a former spokesman and adviser. “He was building a reputation on his own, distinct from what his father and brother were doing in other parts of the country.”

In office, Bush tried to distinguish himself further by being personally accessible to residents via e-mail. A hands-on manager, he won praise for his leadership through a string of intense hurricanes in 2004, a year before his brother was derided for his handling of Hurricane Katrina.

“There’s a bright line you could draw in the styles of the three men,” said Rick Wilson, a Florida-based Republican strategist. “Jeb is the guy who goes home at night and reads the 400-page policy paper, not just the three-paragraph executive summary.”

Bush’s drive to be seen as his own man extended to the most superficial aspects of his politics, including that “Jeb!” campaign logo. At a Florida fundraiser last week, supporters revived the logo with stickers that read, “Jeb! ‘16.” Bush family friends said they expect he will adopt a similar motif for his presidential run.

“It’s an advantage for him,” Ron Kaufman, an adviser and friend of George H.W. Bush, said of the logo. “When people hear Jeb, they know who he is. They don’t say, ‘Which Jeb?’ And quite frankly, it’s a nice psychological difference that this is about Jeb - exclamation point - not anybody else.”

Let's not jump the gun just yet

By Dan Balz

February 15, 2015

The Washington Post

Sometime in the future, people will look back on these early weeks of 2015 and decide what, if anything, was important in the making of the president in 2016. At this point, it's all normal people can do to keep their bearings.

Here's one small example. Six weeks ago, Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker was seen as a prospective candidate who had weathered tough fights at home, had the potential to rise, but also had a reputation as bland and unexciting - and perhaps too parochial for a national campaign.

Then he gave a fiery and well-received speech to an audience of conservatives in Iowa, and suddenly he was the hot ticket in the Republican field. A subsequent Des Moines Register/Bloomberg Politics poll of Iowa Republicans showed him at the top of the pack.

Last week, Walker went to England on a trade mission. His London itinerary included an appearance at Chatham House, a prominent think tank, where he talked about Wisconsin cheese, his Welsh ancestors, Winston Churchill and Margaret Thatcher. But he declined to answer questions about Britain's role in the European Union, lethal aid for Ukrainian forces, dealing with Islamic State militants or the theory of evolution. He was mocked in some quarters for refusing to engage.

What will people remember eight or 10 months from now, when Republicans are in the middle of debate season and the primary-caucus season is about to begin? Will they remember any of these episodes? More importantly, what of all this will have provided clues as to Walker's real strength in the competition to become the Republican nominee and a possible president?

Walker is an easy example to cite, because the narrative about his prospective candidacy has swung rapidly since the turn of the year. But he's hardly the only example of conflicting assessments.

Former Florida governor Jeb Bush is either a strong front-runner for the GOP nomination with the best fundraising potential in the party and a general election message that could give Hillary Rodham Clinton heartburn, or he is someone with a treacherous path to the nomination, with a very large problem in the Iowa caucuses and potential problems in a New Hampshire primary.

New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie is either toast - and you can pick from the bridge scandal that still hasn't touched him directly to his pugnacious personality to the problems in his home state as the reasons to conclude he isn't going to be the GOP nominee - or he is a candidate with leadership strengths, considerable retail political skills and the potential to raise the kind of money needed to compete over a long and difficult primary season.

Sen. Rand Paul of Kentucky is seen either as the cleverest Republican of the bunch, capable of attracting a younger, more diverse coalition to a party badly in need of it, or as a somewhat thin-skinned newcomer, prone to mistakes and still trying to demonstrate that his disparate views fit into a coherent package.

Clinton is either one of the most experienced and capable people to seek the presidency and a virtual lock to be the Democratic nomination, or she is a candidate prone to mistakes who doesn't know what she stands for and leaves the base of her party longing for someone else.

The presidential candidates are now subjected to intense analysis even at this early point. Twitter comes alive with instant analysis and commentary whenever someone does something, as happened during the Iowa Freedom Summit a few weeks ago or when Bush spoke to the Detroit Economic Club or when Christie walked back comments about vaccinations while in London or when Walker spoke at Chatham House, or when Clinton did nothing.

The reality is that this is an inside game, carried on by a small number of people - candidates seeking to impress donors or commentators; a cadre of activists who can't get enough of politics at any time of the cycle; journalists hungry to get the campaign moving ever faster.

People seize on early polls at the same time they offer a caveat that early polls don't mean much. So now Scott Walker leads in Iowa? He does, but with just 16 percent support - and only one point ahead of Rand Paul and just three points ahead of former Arkansas governor Mike Huckabee. It's all margin of error.

Mark Mellman, a Democratic pollster, provided something useful when he parsed the recent Iowa and New Hampshire numbers for his column in The Hill, though he offered a consumer warning at the top that his ramblings amounted to "rank and nearly meaningless speculation."

He looked not at the overall support for each candidate but rather at other findings, including the relationship between how well-known candidates are and their current vote share, or how favorably they are seen now by people. He concluded that Walker has room for growth in both states; that Christie's stock is overvalued; and that Bush and Paul have work to do.

What's missing are the people who will pick the nominees and eventually the next president: voters. They are paying little attention now. With real lives, people don't have time to watch a live stream of a Scott Walker speech in London at 1 p.m. on a Wednesday, or spend 10 hours on a winter Saturday in front of C-SPAN watching two dozen speakers on a stage in Des Moines.

Remember when?

It's true that there is a politically engaged audience across the country that pays more attention to these early months than before - and they have easier access to do so through the Internet. But history tells us to be cautious about reading too much into events that take place during much of the year before the presidential campaign year.

In the fall of 1983, then-Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado was mired in single digits and frustrated. He complained that the press just didn't get it, that reporters were badly underestimating his potential. Most everyone ignored him. A few months later he pulled off a shocker in New Hampshire and nearly beat Walter Mondale for the nomination.

John McCain was nowhere at this point in 1999, yet stunned George W. Bush in New Hampshire in early 2000. McCain was declared politically dead in the summer of 2007 and came back to be the GOP nominee in 2008. Howard Dean was cruising to the Democratic nomination in late 2003 and six weeks later saw his campaign unravel. Eight years ago this spring, Barack Obama was drawing negative coverage - a candidate unable to live up to the hype.

The problem now is that there are often too many conclusions but not enough information. Insiders are eager to connect the dots. Most voters are content to let the candidates come into sharper focus.

This is already a fascinating campaign and destined to become more so. There's no reason to get too far ahead of it, because no one really knows how it will all unfold. That's the beauty of it.

 Organizing for America

John --

Wall Street reform is gaining steam in the Senate, and a vote could come very soon.

But the big banks are ramping up their effort to carve out loopholes and exemptions -- or block the bill altogether.

That's why, this week, we're organizing an urgent message from Main Street to Wall Street to show the widespread support for change.

There's an event near you in Washington on Tuesday, May 11th -- can you make it?

Each event around the country will have a specific, strategic purpose: to build and demonstrate support for Wall Street reform, to ensure that the strongest consumer financial protections in history become law and that American taxpayers are never again forced to bail out a Wall Street firm that's "too big to fail."

I hope you can join us in Washington on Tuesday, May 11th. Here are the details:

What: Wall Street Reform Day of Action Event

Where: 1306 G Street NW
Washington, DC 20005

When: Tuesday, May 11th
Start Time: 7:00 PM

 RSVP for a Wall Street Action event near you

If you can't make it to that event in Washington, see if there are other events you can attend.

No prior experience is necessary; OFA staff or volunteers will be at every event to make sure things go smoothly.

Hello John,

I hope all is well with you. We've put together the attached outlining Equitable Growth's topline objectives for 2015. Please let me know if you have any reactions or feedback.

A few other updates:

- We have a nice, big proposal in from Raj Chetty to fund some very interesting work at Harvard on inequality and innovation. We are working to find a way to get that done on top of our other planned grant-making and I'll let you know how that goes.
- Our Request for Proposals for 2015 is out, systems are in place to track applicants, and things are running smoothly on that front.
- On the policy front, Elisabeth and I are putting together a plan and I'll be able to share that with you by the end of the month.
- I've asked CAP to promote Ed to Managing Director, which is a role he's already filling. He and I are working on the 2015 budget and will share with you when it's ready.
- In the first quarter of 2015, I will be coordinating with the Sandler's on putting together a development plan. I've done over a dozen meetings with foundations to introduce ourselves and we need to take it to the next level.

Best,

Heather

I had a preliminary conversation with her. I asked her what she wanted to do going forward. Since she assumed I was sent to fire her, the conversation improved after the first minute or so when I said she was valued and I really wanted to know what she wanted to do. Bottom line is that she wants to reduce her reports, hold on to Haiti and some of the operations work she is doing (IT, real estate, etc.,) and not look like she is getting demoted. Seems pretty easy to me to work this one out.

Subject: Three quick ideas that might help HRC

1. Come out for reforming the FEC by adding an equal number of independent or un-enrolled members to the Rs and Ds on the Commission. A fair way to give voice to the plurality of Americans who are not registered to either party and a way to break the stalemates that perpetually keep the FEC malfunctioning.
2. Use some variation of the line "I'm all for Senator Sanders goals and will push them when 218 members of the House and 60 Senators are saints. But we know for a fact that the next Congress will not be filled with Saints."
3. Give the Goldman money to Children's Defense Fund - it gives her a legitimate opportunity to get the public to appreciate her long history of social justice in a way that just talking about it or advertising it doesn't. Plan event in SC with Marion Wright Edelman for her to receive the check.

MEMORANDUM

DATE: December 9, 2015

TO: All Unit Owners and Residents
Huys Condominium

FROM: Jeff Klarfeld

SUBJECT: Heat Service Interruption

---

Dear Owners and Residents:

To facilitate the annual cleaning of the cooling tower, there will be an interruption in heat service on Monday, December 14th between the hours of 9:00 AM – 1:00 PM and again on Tuesday December 15th between the hours of 9:00 AM and 5:00 PM.

Please turn your Heat Pump thermostats to the off position to avoid the need for resetting when service is restored.

We apologize for the inconvenience and thank you for your cooperation and understanding.

Sincerely,

Jeff Klarfeld

After further discussions, I believe the latest plan for this "statement for the record" is to submit the verbatim text of her 1/23/13 opening statement but not the Hard Choices chapter. I'm attaching that here and please take another look at the introductory text.

One further thought on the current draft: we might consider softening the "Chris did not believe retreat was an option – and neither do I" line. I don't think we want to suggest that there was a commitment to be there at any and all costs; but rather, that the known risks were being balanced with the reasons for being there, regular assessments of this balance were made, and that the people on the ground were best-positioned to contribute to those assessments.

I think it is good. Imagine the clip they will use is the partisan slugfest sentence. I don't love "backs of dead Americans" in that sentence. I think that is too graphic and splashes back on her as appearing to exploit their deaths.

I like it. Just two thoughts.

We twice call the ARB "independent"—I'd prefer to call it "non-partisan" as we do once in the draft. Hard Choices did not call it "independent", and since it's appointed by and responsible to the Secretary, I think we open an avenue of attack by calling it "independent".

Can we get some more numbers into the early "diplomacy is dangerous" discussion? Sixty-six American diplomatic personnel and over a hundred contractors and locally employed staff killed since the 1970's (or whatever the numbers are). I recognize we have some numbers on page 3 (Beirut bombing, 1998 attacks).

Statement looks good - so long as the lawyers approve.

I would reach out to Obama supporters. Let me nominate Jamal Simmons. He's young (to me) Af-Am and way smart. He worked in the Clinton White House and now does commentary with me on CNN.

Other prominent African-Americans should be courted, like Donna Brazile.

How 'bout Dee Dee Myers? Not African-American, but rumored to be a woman. Knows the media as well as anyone.

Hispanics, anyone? Can we ask Maria Echaveste but not Chris Edley? (I'm kinda pissed at Chris for telling the NY Times that the Clinton Admin had a mixed record on civil rights. Funny, he didn't say that when he was in the Clinton Admin).

I will keep thinking.

DRAFT launch statement

PROGRESSIVE MEDIA

Progressive Media will serve as a communications and messaging nerve center for the progressive movement. We will create a robust echo chamber with messaging that spans from independent groups, to progressive partisans, to grassroots organizers, to the netroots. We will align messaging across broadcast and cable TV, radio, print, Internet, single-issue and advocacy organizations, progressive media, surrogates and new media. Through Progressive Media, during the 2008 election campaign we will focus on showing the public where John McCain stands on key issues facing America and the world. We seek to become a part of the permanent progressive infrastructure to last beyond the 2008 election. Breaking through the clutter of the modern media environment with a progressive message requires repetition of common themes from different sources organized by a central apparatus--that is the organizing task of Progressive Media.

Roger Stone was asked by Jim Baker to organize the Brooks Brothers and he was Donald Trumps first significant campaign operative.

You could leave hotel 5:15, get there for 5:30-6:15pm, depart and plenty of buffer to get to 7pm drinks (google maps says 18mins drive), 4.5miles up the side of the lake the drinks are on.

setup will be standing informal remarks and mix & mingle. Wine and chips...

Subject: March 16th Principals Dinner
Attachments: Principals Dinner Information Memo_2016 02 29_v1.docx

Dear Christiana and John,

We are absolutely delighted that you will be able to join us in San Francisco on March 16. We know that you both have extraordinarily busy schedules and complicated travel plans, so we are especially grateful that you have made time to attend this gathering.

The "Principals Dinner"—as we have named it—is designed to bring together a group of high-net-worth individuals who have already made very substantial philanthropic gifts to support work on climate and clean energy, and who have the capacity to continue or increase their pro-climate investments, personally or through their foundations. We have attached a list of guests who have accepted our invitation. This list is for your reference only, and we ask that you keep it confidential to respect the guests' privacy. Depending on guests' reactions, we may try to organize similar gatherings for climate donors in other places.

The purpose of the Briefing/Roundtable Discussion from 5:30-6:30pm is to give the guests the opportunity to learn about climate issues first-hand from the world's top experts. As a guideline to your talk, we request that you answer the following types of broad questions about climate and energy policy.

- "Where are we?"
- "Where we need to go?"
- "How can we get there?"

During the Q&A session, the entire group will have an opportunity to raise issues and questions and have an informal discussion about particular areas of interest. No PowerPoint or other presentation materials are expected, but you should feel free to use them if you feel they would help you explain your perspective more effectively.

The dinner, starting at 7pm, will not have a formal agenda. It will be an opportunity for the guests to get to know each other (many have not met) and for you to share any additional thoughts that you didn't get to express in the Briefing/Roundtable Discussion.

Christiana, we would ask you to take the lead in providing your perspective on these questions in the international context, with specific insights into how the "Post-Paris" world is different and what the international community must focus on to meet or exceed the goals set in the Paris Agreement.

John, we would ask you to address the same questions focusing on U.S. policies. Guests will probably have specific questions about the effect of the Supreme Court stay of the Clean Power Plan and what might happen on climate and energy depending upon who is elected as President.

We have explicitly promised guests that this is neither a fundraiser nor a political event, but guests understand that funding and politics will almost certainly form part of the backdrop for your presentations and discussions. If either of you would like any further clarification about the Principals Dinner, please feel free to contact me or Steve Colwell (copied on this email).

We are very much looking forward to seeing you on the 16th and are very appreciative of your willingness to participate in this important set of discussions.

Best,

Nat Simons

Subject: Politifact on grandparants

Says "all my grandparents" immigrated to America.

— Hillary Clinton on Wednesday, April 15th, 2015 in a roundtable chat in Iowa

In Iowa, Hillary Clinton claims 'all my grandparents' came to the U.S. from foreign countries

By Katie Sanders on Thursday, April 16th, 2015 at 4:47 p.m.

<http://www.politifact.com/truth-o-meter/statements/2015/apr/16/hillary-clinton/hillary-clinton-flubs-family-immigration-history/>

A marriage application for Hillary Clinton's father, Hugh E. Rodham, to a woman that was not Hillary's mother lists her mother's birthplace as Scranton, Pa., and his father's as England. County record via FamilySearch.org.

Hillary Clinton this week became the latest example of a politician flubbing her family's ancestry while making the case for her presidency.

Clinton was speaking at a business roundtable inside an Iowa produce store when she related her personal family heritage to the struggles of undocumented immigrants trying to work in the United States.

"I think if we were to just go around this room, there are a lot of immigrant stories," Clinton said, according to a video of the event. "All my grandparents, you know, came over here, and you know my grandfather went to work in a lace mill in Scranton, Pa., and worked there until he retired at 65. He started there when he was a teenager and just kept going. So I sit here and I think well you're talking about the second, third generation. That's me, that's you."

BuzzFeed's Andrew Kaczynski quickly pointed out that Clinton was wrong, primarily using census and military records from Ancestry.com.

An unidentified Clinton spokesman admitted the error in a statement to BuzzFeed, saying Clinton's "grandparents always spoke about the immigrant experience and, as a result she has always thought of them as immigrants."

While it's clear Clinton is incorrect, and why her claim rates False on the Truth-O-Meter, we wanted to provide as much context as possible to this claim.

Megan Smolenyak, a "genealogical adventurer and storyteller" who recently examined Clinton's Welsh roots, can see where the campaign is coming from.

Seven of Clinton's eight great-grandparents were born overseas into working-class families.

Clinton's paternal grandfather, Hugh Rodham Sr., was born in England, but her three other grandparents were born in the United States.

Hugh Rodham's wife, Hanna (also Hannah) Jones Rodham, was born in Scranton, Pa., to Welsh parents a couple years after they emigrated. Census, civil and military records show Clinton's maternal grandparents, Della and Edwin Howell, were born in Illinois. (Della's mother was the one great-grandparent born in the United States.)

Even though three of Clinton's grandparents were born in the United States, Smolenyak said they probably strongly identified with their immigrant parents and older siblings, and she considers Clinton's ancestors more "off the boat" than most politicians.

Clinton is not the first person, famous or not, to potentially confuse family lore with the cold facts of her roots. Her misfire follows the misinterpreted family trees of U.S. Sens. Marco Rubio, who wrongly said his parents were Cuban exiles, and Elizabeth Warren, who claimed American Indian heritage while working as a Harvard professor.

"We hold politicians to higher standards for accuracy in their family histories than we do genealogists and historians," Smolenyak said. "Your Great Aunt Tilly tells you something, and you believe it."

Finding Hanna Jones

Again, it is clear Clinton was wrong when she said "all my grandparents" immigrated to America. But Smolenyak recently upended the real story about one-quarter of Clinton's roots.

A few months ago, Smolenyak started researching Clinton's Celtic connections for Irish America magazine. She was not expecting to find anything new in the well-documented background of a high-profile American, but she wrapped her investigation with a "wake-up call" for genealogists.

Researchers had made critical mistakes in the background of Clinton's paternal grandmother, Hanna Jones Rodham (born in Scranton), she found.

At the beginning, Smolenyak knew she needed to search for records with names spanning all kinds of possibilities, as Jones is a common name in Wales, and a woman named Hanna could go by several names, including Annie, Anna, Hanna, Honora or Nora. (Americans weren't as picky about the spelling of their names and records retention back then, she said.)

Census records show two women born in the early 1880s in Lackawanna County, Pa., named Hanna (or Hannah) Jones. But researchers chose the wrong Hanna Jones and ran with it, wrongly assigning Hillary Clinton's roots to that woman's parents and creating a false echo chamber (PolitiFact can relate to the frustration).

The wrong Hanna Jones, born in 1883, had a readily accessible birth record, but the right one, born in 1882, did not.

Smolenyak confirmed the real Hanna Jones, Clinton's grandmother, by picking up clues from records over time. A low-key marriage announcement in the Aug. 9, 1902, edition of the Scranton Times-Tribune offered potential proof that Jones and Hugh Rodham eloped in a nearby New York town where marriage had fewer restrictions: Ms. Anna Jones, of Brick avenue, was quietly wedded to Hugh Rodham, of Park place, at Binghamton, Memorial Day. Mr. and Mrs. Rodham will make their residence with the bride's parents on Brick avenue.

From there she could find out more information about the Joneses who lived on Brick in Scranton and match up what she knew about Hanna with other records about the family. Census records from 1910, 1920 and 1930 say Hanna (and also Hannah) Jones was born in Pennsylvania while her husband was born in England. Her parents are listed as born in Wales.

PolitiFact found an unfinished application for a 1937 marriage license from Clinton's father, Hugh E. Rodham, that lists the birthplace of both of his parents, Hugh Sr. in England and Hannah in Scranton. Interestingly, the marriage license does not list Hugh Jr.'s eventual wife and Hillary's mother, Dorothy Howell, but another woman whom he did not marry, Catherine Meisinger.

Our ruling

Talking about immigration in Iowa, Clinton said, "All my grandparents, you know, came over here."

It's very clear from the evidence that not all of Hillary Clinton's grandparents were immigrants. In fact, only one was.

It's possible she misspoke, but it doesn't make her comment more accurate. We rate her claim False.

Subject: [big campaign] New Huff Post from Creamer -- Obama, Progressives and Afghanistan

Obama, Progressives and Afghanistan

Like many Progressives, I disagreed with President Obama's decision to increase the number of American troops deployed to Afghanistan. But Progressives must not lose sight of the fact, that though we may disagree with this particular decision, President Obama shares a progressive vision of American foreign policy – including Afghanistan -- that differs fundamentally from that of his Neo-Con predecessor.

At its core, President Obama's Tuesday night speech elaborated his plan to end the American military presence in Afghanistan. His chosen path may not end that presence as quickly as many Progressives would prefer, but he was very clear that America will not conduct an open-ended occupation of Afghanistan, and he set a firm deadline to begin American withdrawal.

Barack Obama understands that Western occupation of a Muslim country ultimately feeds extremism, rather than defeating it. And he understands – as he said in his speech – that our relationship with Afghanistan must ultimately be as a partner, not as a patron. Barack Obama opposes pre-emptive war and the unilateralism that earned George Bush the enmity of people everywhere.

Let us remember that if Barack Obama had been President eight years ago, he would have managed our engagement in Afghanistan completely differently from George Bush – and he would have never invaded Iraq.

While some Progressives may not fully appreciate the fundamental difference between Barack Obama's approach to the world and that of Bush and Cheney, there is no question that the Neo-Con crowd understands it clearly. Dick Cheney's attacks on the President are not simply partisan politics. His criticism of Obama's withdrawal deadline is emblematic of a fundamental disagreement in world view.

The President rejected the original McChrystal proposal for a gradual buildup of American forces over the next 18 months that was premised on a large American presence over a number of years. He also rejected a long-term nation-building mission in Afghanistan, focused heavily on the central government there. Instead he chose to bulk up American forces over the next six months, set an 18-month timeline to begin the disengagement of our military, and provide sharp incentives for the Afghan government to put its house in order – and develop their security forces – immediately.

I do not personally agree that increasing the American military footprint in Afghanistan will promote stability or help us contain al Qaeda. Like many Progressives, I am increasingly convinced that our military presence there fuels the conflict by generating nationalist opposition to Western presence -- and actually destabilizes the country.

But I consider the President's decision to increase short-term troop levels to be a tactical disagreement – not a disagreement concerning goals or strategic vision. The proof of the pudding will, of course, be in the eating. Personally, I believe that by the end of his first term, President Obama will have completely withdrawn American forces from Iraq and that most combat forces will be gone from Afghanistan as well.

And I can state with certainty that this President will not have launched some other military adventure or begun a new interventionist initiative because he does not believe that is the way to create a safe, prosperous and peaceful world.

We will have a very different world in 2012 with Barack Obama as President than we would have had under the leadership of George Bush or John McCain.

We must also remember that the Bush Administration's eight-year mismanagement of the struggle in Afghanistan – and diversion of resources to the War in Iraq -- left President Obama no truly good options there.

America had a brief window of opportunity after the fall of the Taliban to mobilize the world to provide the economic, political support that could make a real change in Afghanistan – and then to withdraw our military presence as soon as possible. Unfortunately that did not happen and now our nine-year military presence there has caused more and more ordinary Afghans to think of us as occupiers to be expelled, rather than as partners in building their country. This problem is particularly acute in rural Afghanistan, which has never really considered itself subject to central government control – and where the tradition of fighting foreign occupiers goes back millennia.

But let's not pretend that our military disengagement from Afghanistan will be simple. Quite apart from its impact on Pakistan, the tribal areas and al Qaeda, let's remember that the former Taliban government brutally suppressed much of the population – and in particular women. Today in Afghanistan one-fourth of the women still wear burqas with tiny screens that allow only a partial view of the world. If the Taliban were to return to power, all women would once again be required to wear the burqa – and none would receive education.

As we disengage militarily, we have an obligation to do the best we can to leave behind a government that can protect women from oppression, and provides hope for long-term economic development.

As an ardent opponent of the War in Iraq – and before that the Viet Nam War -- I certainly understand the passion of Progressives who oppose sending more troops to Afghanistan. But whatever the disappointment in the President's decision, it must not be allowed to overwhelm the enormous stake Progressives have in Barack Obama's success.

I read an article yesterday by a prominent Progressive that said it was now time for him to scrape off the Obama bumper sticker. Wrong.

The Obama presidency presents an unprecedented historic window for progressive change. Our ability to succeed rests heavily on Barack Obama's success as President. Just as importantly, his success and ours depend on the mobilization of Progressives across America to organize for change. If we don't organize to win, the other side will successfully organize to stop us.

No one said change would be easy. Health care reform, re-regulating the financial sector, immigration reform, creating a clean energy economy -- all require the political defeat of powerful, entrenched political and economic interests. For anyone who thought Barack Obama could snap his fingers and make change, think again. Progressives are engaged in a protracted, multi-year political and economic struggle. But the big difference is that with Barack Obama as President and a Democratic Congress, we are on the offensive and no longer in a defensive crouch.

We might not agree with every decision. We might fundamentally disagree with some. But we cannot lose sight that we are part of an historic progressive movement for change whose success requires that Barack Obama be successful as well.

Robert Creamer is a long-time political organizer and strategist, and author of the recent book: "Stand Up Straight: How Progressives Can Win," available on amazon.com.

Sen. Clinton's Campaign:

CLINTON CAMPAIGNS IN WEST VIRGINIA ON MOTHER'S DAY. The AP (5/12, Apuzzo) reports Hillary Rodham Clinton "toured the birthplace of Mother's Day in rural West Virginia, offering Democrats a subtle reminder Sunday that her fading candidacy remains strong among women and blue-collar, white voters." That "loyal base is expected to carry Clinton to a sizable victory in the primary on Tuesday, though it won't do much to close the gap between her and Barack Obama, her rival for the Democratic presidential nomination." Clinton's "lingering candidacy highlights not just her strengths but also how difficult it has been for Obama to make inroads among some key Democratic constituencies." Clinton made "a brief afternoon visit to the home of Anna Jarvis, who is credited with founding Mother's Day 100 years ago."

The CBS Evening News (5/11, story 5, 2:25, Axelrod, 7.66M) reported, "Behind in delegates and votes, her campaign now at least $20 million in debt, Hillary Clinton had no shortage of subjects to pray for in West Virginia." The New York Times (5/12, Seelye, 1.18M) reports Clinton "rose early and spent a 16-hour day slogging through a cold rain in West Virginia, the next state on her to-do list" while Obama and John McCain "took the day off. Perhaps they feel more confident in their status as the most likely presidential nominees of their respective parties." But with "the lights dimming on her prospects for winning the nomination and only six Democratic contests left to go, Mrs. Clinton did not dare take a day of rest."

The State Journal (WV) (5/11, McCall) reported on its website that Clinton on Sunday "spoke to a packed house at the B & O Railroad Museum in" Grafton, WV, discussing "her family and what it meant to celebrate the 100th anniversary of Mother's Day in the place where it all started."

Clinton Has Huge Lead In Pair Of WV Polls. An American Research Group poll of 600 likely West Virginia Democratic primary voters taken May 7-8 shows Sen. Hillary Clinton leading Sen. Barack Obama 66%-23%.

A Suffolk University poll of 600 likely West Virginia Democratic primary voters taken May 10-11 shows Clinton leading Obama 60%-24%.

West Virginia Results Said Likely To "Raise Fresh Doubts" On Obama's Electability. The Financial Times (5/12, Ward), noting that Sen. Barack Obama trails Sen. Hillary Clinton "by 40 percentage points" in West Virginia "ahead of tomorrow's primary election in the heavily white and rural state, according to recent opinion polls," the Times reports that Tuesday's "contest is likely to reinforce Mrs Clinton's argument that she would be the stronger opponent for" Sen. John McCain "in November, and raise fresh doubts about whether the US is ready to elect its first black president. ... No Democrat has been elected to the White House without carrying West Virginia since 1916, yet Mr Obama appears to have little chance of winning there in November." The state "is hostile territory for Mr Obama because it has few of the African-Americans and affluent, college-educated whites who provide his strongest support. The state has the lowest college graduation rate in the US, the second lowest median household income, and one of the highest proportions of white residents, at 96 per cent."

The Baltimore Sun (5/12, Nitkin, 252K) reports that Obama "acknowledged last week that Clinton had an 'insurmountable lead' in West Virginia and neighboring Kentucky, but he has done little to secure a different result -- further evidence that the Democratic contest has moved to its next stage. Yet West Virginia's results could magnify Obama's weaknesses." Obama "runs strongly among young voters, but the proportion of West Virginia's population older than 65 is second-highest in the nation, trailing only Florida. It's the fifth-poorest state, and 95 percent of its residents are white, the fourth-highest percentage in the country, according to the Census. White voters and lower-income voters have been among Clinton's most loyal constituencies. ... Clinton communications director Howard Wolfson yesterday called West Virginia a "key swing state" in the general election, and said on Fox News Sunday that Obama's likely loss would exacerbate questions about his electability."

CLINTON LEADS OBAMA BY 27 POINTS IN KENTUCKY. The Lexington Herald-Leader (5/12, Alessi, 115K) reports Hillary Clinton "enters the final week before Kentucky's May 20 Democratic presidential primary with a commanding 27 percentage point lead over U.S. Sen. Barack Obama, a new poll shows." Clinton leads Obama "58 percent to 31 percent, with 11 percent uncommitted, according to a Herald-Leader/WKYT Kentucky Poll of 500 probable Democratic voters" conducted by Research 2000. But either Democratic candidate "would trail the expected Republican nominee, John McCain, in the state by double digits if the November general election were held today, reveals a companion survey of 600 likely voters from all parties." The poll shows McCain topping Obama 58%-33% and Clinton 53%-41%.

Race Hurts Obama In Kentucky. McClatchy (5/12, Blackford) reports Obama's "race and inflammatory racial remarks made by his former preacher negatively affect how likely voters view the candidate, according to a new poll in Kentucky." More than "one in five likely Democratic voters surveyed said being black hurts Obama's chances of winning an election in Kentucky, compared to 4 percent who said Obama's race helps him." Many said "the racially charged remarks by the Rev. Jeremiah Wright will play an important role as they decide whom to support. Among white voters, Wright's statements were important to 46 percent, compared to only 11 percent of black voters."

FORMER PRESIDENT BILL CLINTON CAMPAIGNS IN OREGON. The AP (5/12, Dininny) reports that in a visit to Eastern Oregon, former President Bill Clinton "touted his wife's economic, education, energy and health care policies and urged residents to support her" in Oregon's upcoming primary, saying she "remains Democrats' best hope for winning the fall election." Nevertheless, the AP adds that the former president "conceded that Democrats must unify" to beat Sen. John McCain in the fall, regardless of who wins the Democratic primary battle. The AP also reports Sen. Clinton "spent Mother's Day with her daughter in West Virginia, where she planned to visit the home of the woman credited with founding the holiday 100 years ago."

In another report, the AP (5/12, Frazier) reports, "With the Democratic presidential nomination slipping from his wife's grasp," the former President "urged residents from Eastern Oregon to Western Oregon to give her an important victory in the state's upcoming primary. Clinton told a group of about 125 labor union members in Portland he had 'no earthly idea' why some people want" Sen. Clinton "to leave the race. ... 'She has been declared dead more times than a cat has lives,' he said. 'But you don't want the person in the Oval Office to quit on you when the going gets tough.' Clinton's on a three-day, 13-city swing through the state. He visits Corvallis, Eugene and three coastal cities on Monday before heading to Roseburg, Grants Pass and Klamath Falls on Tuesday."

MCAULIFFE SAYS "SOMETHING BIG" NEEDED FOR CLINTON TO WIN. The Politico (5/12, Reilly) reports Clinton campaign chairman Terry McAuliffe "admitted Sunday that 'something big would have to happen' for his candidate to overtake Sen. Barack Obama (D-Ill.) in the race for the Democratic presidential nomination. However, McAuliffe vowed that the campaign would press on, despite increasing calls for Clinton to step aside." On NBC's "Meet the Press," McAuliffe "acknowledged that it was 'highly unlikely' that Clinton could catch Obama in elected delegates but reminded viewers that neither candidate has reached the 'magic number' of delegates necessary to lock up the nomination."

The AP (5/12, Woodward, Benac) reports many people believed Clinton's "victory in the Democratic nomination battle was a sure thing. Her ultimate failing may have been in believing it, too." The AP story is essentially a pre-postmortem, saying Clinton's "campaign is on the ropes. Clinton is fighting on for a prize few believe she can win anymore, barring some game-changing development."

Clintons Said To Hold "Almost Mystical Belief" In Possibility Of Game-Changing Event. The Los Angeles Times (5/11, Parsons, Malcolm) reported on its 'Top of the Ticket' blog, "The airwaves, newspaper pages and e-mails among Democratic loyalists are full of certain messages that" Clinton's "chances of winning are nil and it's not if she gives up a quest that once seemed certain but when." However, "the suggestive chatter and at-large urging of surrender forgets a crucial historical fact about the Clintons. Even when the situation is clearly hopeless to everyone else -- dead, gone, deceased, buried, cold -- quitting doesn't seem to be a page in their playbook. They cling to an almost mystical belief in something unexpected happening to save their bacon. And with serial justification. ... To be sure, the superdelegates do not want to be seen to take the victory away from Obama and perhaps split the party for a generation. But what if Obama fumbles the ball on his own before mid-June and gives the supers sufficient pause to pause in their flow toward him? Something could happen. Obama's made several rookie mistakes, most recently departing from his text to announce that he's now campaigned in all 57 states. Minor slips, to be sure. Fatigue probably. But serial."

Clinton Said To Be Losing Support In Harlem. The New York Post (5/12, Moscrip, 648K) reports, "Harlem was once the only place in the nation where Hillary Rodham Clinton could count on black support. Now it's hard to find any Clinton backers there, even in the shadow of her husband's 125th Street office. In New York's February primary, she carried Harlem, 54 to 46 percent. But Obama has been winning 90 percent or more of the black vote elsewhere."

Some Leading Democrats Seen As Taking Care Not To Pressure Clinton To Withdraw. The Chicago Tribune (5/12, Parsons, 607K) reports, "Breaking up is hard to do, especially when the other person doesn't want to say goodbye. One way to go is the torturously deferential one, which is the route of choice for some of those leading Democrats who think the race for the presidential nomination is pretty much over for Hillary Clinton. Take this lengthy comment Sunday from John Edwards, about Clinton's decision to remain in the race: 'I think the one thing that she has to be careful about-and she doesn't need my advice, she knows this full well-is that, if she makes the case for herself, which she's completely entitled to do, she has to be really careful that she's not damaging our prospects, the Democratic Party, and our cause, for the fall,' Edwards said on CBS' 'Face the Nation.'" The Tribune says the Connecticut Sen. Chris Dodd also "avoiding suggesting Clinton should drop out of the race" during his appearance yesterday on NBC's "Meet the Press."

OBAMA TAKES LEAD IN SUPERDELEGATE ENDORSEMENTS. Barack Obama over the weekend surpassed Hillary Clinton in the number of announced endorsements by superdelegates. The AP (5/10, Ohlemacher) reports Obama "erased" Clinton's "once-imposing lead" on Saturday. Obama added "superdelegates from Utah, Ohio and Arizona, as well as two from the Virgin Islands who had previously backed Clinton." The milestone is "important because Clinton would need to win over the superdelegates by a wide margin to claim the nomination. They are a group that Clinton owned before the first caucus, when she was able to cash in on the popularity of the Clinton brand among the party faithful." Of the 800 superdelegates, "Obama has endorsements from 276, according to the latest tally by The Associated Press. Clinton has 271.5."

Bloomberg News (5/12, Dodge, Goldman) reports, "With Obama's latest endorsements, he has 277 superdelegates to Clinton's 274.5, according to a Bloomberg tally based on lists and public statements from both campaigns."

The CBS Evening News (5/11, story 5, 2:25, Axelrod, 7.66M) reported, "There are roughly 250 or so uncommitted superdelegates. The number decreases almost by the hour, mostly as they break for Obama. But what hurts Hillary Clinton even more than that are the defectors, superdelegates who were for her, but have now changed their minds." Rep. Donald Payne, Obama superdelegate was shown saying, "I firmly believe, now, that Senator Obama is truly the person that can lead this country." Axelrod: "New Jersey congressman Donald Payne is one of those defectors putting a smile on Obama's face."

CLINTON CAMP FANNING "BACKLASH" TO MOTIVATE SUPPORTERS. The Politico (5/11, Vogel) reports the "legions of Hillary Rodham Clinton backers still investing their cash, energy and emotion into her faltering bid for the Democratic presidential nomination seem driven not by the reasonable expectation that she can beat Barack Obama, but by the emotional desire to see her through to the end of voting and stick it to those who have already written her off." Clinton's campaign is "fanning the flames of that backlash - against the media, against superdelegates who recently backed Obama and against Obama himself. Aides hope to convert the sentiments into protest votes that could deliver landslide victories in West Virginia and Kentucky, Clinton strongholds that are among the next three states to cast ballots."

CLINTON SUPPORTERS BEHIND GROUP BACKING CLINTON-OBAMA TICKET. McClatchy (5/12, Talev) reports a group "called VoteBoth has been leading the charge for Hillary Clinton and Barack Obama to team up on the Democratic ticket," but the "people behind it come from just one of those camps - Clinton's - and one of their goals may be keeping Clinton's White House prospects alive." Founder Adam Parkhomenko "until recently worked as an assistant to Patti Solis Doyle, who was Clinton's campaign manager until February." VoteBoth's spokesman "is Sam Arora. He's a law school student who in recent years worked for Clinton and for former Democratic National Committee chairman Terry McAuliffe, Clinton's presidential campaign chairman." VoteBoth's Facebook page "lists three others as administrators, all with Clinton connections."

CLINTON FACES MOUNTING CAMPAIGN DEBTS. U.S. News and World Report (5/8, Schulte, 2.03M), in an article titled, "Why Clinton Stands To Lose Millions," reports Sen. Hillary Clinton "doled out $6.4 million of her own money to her campaign since April. ... That brings her total cash outlay to more than $11 million since January. And she's not ruling out spending more as she plans to compete in the six remaining contests." US News notes that a provision in the McCain-Feingold campaign-finance reform bill says "a campaign must repay the loan to a candidate before Election Day. In this case, that's the nominating convention. After the election has passed, a bankrupt campaign is limited to gathering just $250,000 from contributors, which means that modest sum is all it can give back to a candidate. In short, Clinton stands to lose $11,150,000." US News adds, "According to her latest FEC filing, the Hillary Clinton for President campaign committee owes millions to vendors, including more than $4.5 million to Penn, Schoen & Berland Associates, the consulting firm of her former chief strategist Mark Penn."

Obama Camp Not Planning To Help Clinton Retire Campaign Debt. The Hill (5/12, Swanson) reports Obama and his campaign aides "have not discussed paying off his rival's $20 million campaign debt, top advisers to Obama and Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton (D-N.Y.) said Sunday." Obama strategist David Axelrod said, "She hasn't asked and we haven't offered." Axelrod "added that he did not believe Clinton was looking for a deal in which she would drop out of the race for the Democratic nomination in exchange for Obama's help in retiring her campaign debt."

Obama campaign chief strategist David Axelrod, on Fox News Sunday (5/11, Wallace), said, "I don't think even under any scenario no one said that we were going to transfer money from the Obama campaign to the Clinton campaign. We obviously need the resources we have."

OBAMA SHIFTS CAMPAIGN FOCUS TO MCCAIN. In an indication of his renewed confidence that he will eventually win the Democratic nomination, Barack Obama is targeting John McCain rather than primary rival Hillary Clinton as he begins to implement his general election campaign strategy. The Christian Science Monitor (5/11, Grier, 58K) reports Obama "increasingly is ignoring the competitor from his own party to focus on presumptive GOP nominee John McCain." This "move likely is intended to be self-fulfilling. By behaving as if he has finally wrapped up the Democratic contest, Senator Obama may generate fresh excitement among his supporters and lure crucial superdelegates into his camp." But it "also probably reflects the Obama campaign's judgment of its actual position. The math is the math, and as the primaries dwindle to a precious few, Hillary Rodham Clinton's chance of winning the nomination has dwindled as well."

The Politico (5/12, Brown, Vogel) reports after the results of Tuesday's West Virginia primary are reported, Barack Obama will be "exercising his new-found role as the likely Democratic nominee" and will "travel to Missouri, a general election swing state, to begin laying the groundwork for November. He will do the same next week in Florida, raising money and setting out on what aides describe as a fence-mending bid in the orphaned state." The travel schedule "is just one mark of a candidate eager to shift from primary to general election mode." In a "two-day swing through Oregon, Obama purged Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton from his stump speeches, addressing his Democratic rival only when asked by voters. Obama instead focused solely on Sen. John McCain, the presumptive Republican nominee."

The Wall Street Journal (5/12, Phillips, Millman, 2.06M) reports both Obama and Clinton "stepped up their criticism of John McCain and aimed fewer potshots at each other amid signs the nomination fight is winding down and the Democratic Party is coalescing around Sen. Obama." Before "taking time off the campaign trail Sunday, Sen. Obama zeroed in on the Republican presidential candidate's 'gas-tax holiday,' ridiculing the proposal as saving motorists 'a quarter and a nickel a day' through the summer. He also tested a new, harsher message: Sen. McCain's involvement in the 1987 Keating Five savings and loan scandal would be fair game for the general election."

EDWARDS SEES OBAMA AS LIKELY DEMOCRATIC NOMINEE. The AP (5/12) reports John Edwards "said Sunday that he thinks Barack Obama will be the party's presidential nominee and that Hillary Rodham Clinton must be careful not to damage the party's prospects in November as she continues her campaign." On CBS' "Face The Nation," Edwards said, "But I think the one thing that she has to be careful about ... going forward, is that, if she makes the case for herself, which she's completely entitled to do, she has to be really careful that she's not damaging our prospects, the Democratic Party, and our cause, for the fall."

The New York Times (5/11, Knowlton, 1.18M) reports Edwards "made it clear" that he "saw little chance that Mrs. Clinton could manage a come-from-behind victory." Edwards said, "You can no longer make a compelling case for the math. The math is very, very hard for her."

Subject: Hillary on CEO pay and her investing her money with Vanguard

John,

Hillary has rightly been speaking out about excessive CEO pay. Today;s (Sun May 17) NYT has a story about the percentage of shareholders in each of the 200 named companies that approve these excessive CEO pay packages.

<http://www.nytimes.com/2015/05/17/business/shareholders-votes-have-done-little-to-curb-lavish-executive-pay.html?>

I see from a story in the NYT two days ago that Hillary's own assets are invested in a Vanguard index fund. FYI Vanguard votes Hillary's shares to approve almost all these excessive CEO pay packages -- at a rate FAR WORSE than almost all other index fund managers (except Blackrock). The pension funds of several states and cities (e.g. NYC, Calif, Ohio, Florida) all vote much better than Vanguard on this and other issues.

Vanguard also votes Hillary's shares against disclosure of political spending by corporations -- contrary to Hillary's position.

The founder of Vanguard, Jack Bogle, has complained bitterly how the company he founded has voted so poorly on these two issues.

The statistics on all this are detailed on Figure 5 on page 11 of <http://www.asyousow.org/wp-content/uploads/report/The-100-Most-Overpaid-CEOs.pdf>
as well as in Figure 2 on page 3 of <http://www.politicalaccountability.net/index.php?ht=a/GetDocumentAction/i/8720>

I would suggest Hillary would be better served by using an index fund from some other supplier. In particular I would suggest the LONGVIEW fund run by Amalgamated Bank, but there are numerous others she could use (for example, Schwab). In the meantime she risks being charged with hypocrisy on the issue of excessive CEO pay and political spending by corporations -- i.e. speaking out against these issues but using her resources/money to vote to approve bad policies on these matters.

If Hillary were to publicly switch from Vanguard for this reason she would generate a ton of publicity on the failure of many Wall Street fund managers to do their job in looking out for the interests of their investors.

Subject: **Knox College Off-Campus Admission Interviews**

Hi John,

My name is Ben Wetherbee and I work in the Office of Admission at Knox College, and I'm also a 2012 graduate of Knox. I am reaching out to you because I will be conducting Off-Campus Interviews in Bethesda, MD this weekend.

If you know of any high school seniors that are interested in Knox or feel would be good fits for Knox, please feel free to let them know I'll be in the area. I will be conducting the interviews in the lobby area of the Bethesda Marriott Hotel on Friday (4pm-7pm), Saturday (9am-1pm) and Sunday (9am-1pm).

Students can sign up for an interview by emailing me at bwetherb@knox.edu or at <https://apply.knox.edu/interviews/>

Thanks for all that you do to support Knox!

All the best,

-Ben

A bright good hard-working, will-do-what-needs-to-be-done dollar-a-year person you may find valuable.

John,

If you could use a: (1) bright (graduate degree out of NYU); (2) independently wealthy; (3) willing to work hard at whatever needs to be done; (4) approx. 45 to 50-year-old (I am guessing) Greek-American; (5) whose husband passed away and whose youngest is now in college (she is now an empty nester); (6) now lives in NY but will easily and immediately relocate, I have a good person for you to consider. Her name is Maria Allwin.

Let me know if she could be of any help.

Subject: Tech Weekly Report (Feb 1st to Feb 8th)

Happy First In The Nation Primary Day!

Reference links:

* Q1 project current status

* Archive of previous Weekly Reports

Apologies, sent this initially with the wrong date range!

Week starting February 1

Wins:

- Quick Donate Queuing: Groundwork added support where Quick Donate donations are now queued, ensuring they can be processed in real-time when Stripe is healthy and queued when Stripe is unhealthy. This means we no longer lose Quick Donates when New Donate is running in failover mode. YUGE!
- Reporter/Aurora in Iowa: Reporter and Aurora were a big success in Iowa. The tools never dropped data, and Analytics was able to get the results they needed in real time.
  - We got results for 70% of the precincts in Iowa with ~800 precinct captains installing the app and ~600 using the app to submit data.
  - We caught ~50 discrepancies between our data & the Iowa Democratic Party's data, which allowed the team to solve delegate complications in 6 precincts.
  - Reporter saved the call center a significant volume of calls because precinct captains could both submit results & caucus issues directly through the app. 50% of the precincts results came directly through the Reporter app, and 50% came through through the call center.

Updates:

- SMS tool aka Megaphone!: Our VAN chrome extension and SMS tool will now be known as Megaphone! Over the past week, we've been working to improve the Megaphone so it can be more easily used across the early states and on into March states. We're working on ways to allow states to add users and SMS templates to the tool (we have to do this manually now). It's been used in NH to build for events and will be used on primary day for GOTV asks.

- Mobile update: We are working on a "gamified experience" app to engage and activate supporters, specifically those who have not yet donated or volunteered. Our team of product, design, engineers and an illustrator are working hard to target a Convention launch. We're currently testing different versions of design prototypes with users and working towards defining an appealing visual style with an illustrator. We are also vetting the initial set of activities that users can complete in the app to make sure we try a diverse set of activities and adapt any future activities based on user behavior.
- HFA cloud for Vertica analytics: Tech is ready for Analytics to move over to the HFA cluster as we've finished the hardware and software upgrades. Limited load testing has been performed but we are unable to fully load test without real traffic. Next steps are to move Analytics over in a staged fashion, we're aiming to do this in the time between the next few caucuses/primaries to minimize disruption.

Outage:

- Stripe outage: Beginning at 5:02 p.m. ET on 02/04/2016 Stripe began experiencing an uptick in the amount of time it takes for us to confirm a successful donations. This results in failed donations on our website. We flipped over to our backup payment process, Cybersource, at 5:12 p.m. ET. We currently support one-time donations to our HFA account through Cybersource -- all other contribution methods (saved credit card, subscription, all HVF donations) -- were disabled. Stripe confirmed a recovery around 5:25 p.m. ET and we flipped back to Stripe at 5:27 p.m. ET. Quick Donate queueing (mentioned above) and upcoming support for HVF contributions in Cybersource will allow us to retain donations when Stripe experiences outages.
- Ops coverage update: As we continue through primary season things are only going to get crazier, so the tech ops team has been making rounds through our agile teams to make sure everyone has the support they need. We now have a complete list of all of our production services and a better understanding of how we can help all of our developers keep things running smoothly during busy times. Coming soon: new ways to contact our on-call engineers when you have a problem -- look for updates in your inbox this week!

Hiring:

- Welcome Matt Tucker (Senior Software Engineer): Matt is our first backend engineer to join the Donate team. He will own building new services that extend Groundwork's functionality in order to continue to grow our online fundraising capabilities. Before joining HFA, Matt was co-founder of Unfold, an iOS app for sharing, discovering and having conversations about interesting stuff you find on the internet. Before Unfold, Matt was a Sr. Backend Engineer at charity: water where he helped build their crowdfunding platform as well as critical internal systems.
- Welcome James Plummer (Senior Product Designer): James will be working across two main product areas -- Fundraising and Organizing. On the Fundraising side, James will be partnering with Deepa and working with the Donation agile team to build the highest converting donation (web or native mobile) workflows ever seen on a political campaign. He'll also be applying that same design thinking to signup forms. On the Organizing side, James will be working with Gerard on tools to improve life for staff and leadership whether that means continuing to build out the Chrome Extension, expanding the power of the Raiser (aka Palmer) tool, or other upcoming "awesome organizer dopeness" (his words, not mine!).

Subject: Delegate wise...

...we are currently expecting (though it may change):

- to lose Nebraska 10-15 (or maybe 11-14)
- to lose Kansas 10-23
- to win Louisiana 37-14 (or maybe a little better)

If those all hold, we will net 5 delegates today

For context, we lost these three states by a combo of 34 net delegates in 2008 (according to Politico):

- In 2008, we lost Nebraska 8-16
- In 2008, we lost Kansas 9-23
- In 2008, we lost Louisiana 22-34

Versus 2008, today is going to be a swing of roughly 39 net delegates in just these three states

Again, these numbers are not final, so we will update as things change.

Thanks, Herb. I had read it in the NYRB. Not bad, but not deep. One trouble with Joe's Roosevelt Institute program (which I helped launch) is that it includes dozens of items with no indication of what matters most, what matters less. That's what I want to get from Berkeley, WCEG etc.

Why the Rich Are So Much Richer

James Surowiecki

The fundamental truth about American economic growth today is that while the work is done by many, the real rewards largely go to the few. The numbers are, at this point, woefully familiar: the top one percent of earners take home more than 20 percent of the income, and their share has more than doubled in the last thirty-five years. The gains for people in the top 0.1 percent, meanwhile, have been even greater. Yet over that same period, average wages and household incomes in the US have risen only slightly, and a number of demographic groups (like men with only a high school education) have actually seen their average wages decline.

Income inequality has become such an undeniable problem, in fact, that even Republican politicians have taken to decrying its effects. It's not surprising that a Democrat like Barack Obama would call dealing with inequality "the defining challenge of our time." But when Jeb Bush's first big policy speech of 2015 spoke of the frustration that Americans feel at seeing "only a small portion of the population riding the economy's up escalator," it was a sign that inequality had simply become too obvious, and too harmful, to be ignored.

Something similar has happened in economics. Historically, inequality was not something that academic economists, at least in the dominant neoclassical tradition, worried much about. Economics was about production and allocation, and the efficient use of scarce resources. It was about increasing the size of the pie, not figuring out how it should be divided. Indeed, for many economists, discussions of equity were seen as perilous, because there was assumed to be a necessary "tradeoff" between efficiency and equity: tinkering with the way the market divided the pie would end up making the pie smaller. As the University of Chicago economist Robert Lucas put it, in an oft-cited quote: "Of the tendencies that are harmful to sound economics, the most seductive, and...the most poisonous, is to focus on questions of distribution."

Today, the landscape of economic debate has changed. Inequality was at the heart of the most popular economics book in recent memory, the economist Thomas Piketty's Capital. The work of Piketty and his colleague Emmanuel Saez has been instrumental in documenting the rise of income inequality, not just in the US but around the world. Major economic institutions, like the IMF and the OECD, have published studies arguing that inequality, far from enhancing economic growth, actually damages it. And it's now easy to find discussions of the subject in academic journals.

All of which makes this an ideal moment for the Columbia economist Joseph Stiglitz. In the years since the financial crisis, Stiglitz has been among the loudest and most influential public intellectuals decrying the costs of inequality, and making the case for how we can use government policy to deal with it. In his 2012 book, The Price of Inequality, and in a series of articles and Op-Eds for Project Syndicate, Vanity Fair, and The New York Times, which have now been collected in The Great Divide, Stiglitz has made the case that the rise in inequality in the US, far from being the natural outcome of market forces, has been profoundly shaped by "our policies and our politics," with disastrous effects on society and the economy as a whole. In a recent report for the Roosevelt Institute called Rewriting the Rules, Stiglitz has laid out a detailed list of reforms that he argues will make it possible to create "an economy that works for everyone."

Stiglitz's emergence as a prominent critic of the current economic order was no surprise. His original Ph.D. thesis was on inequality. And his entire career in academia has been devoted to showing how markets cannot always be counted on to produce ideal results. In a series of enormously important papers, for which he would eventually win the Nobel Prize, Stiglitz showed how imperfections and asymmetries of information regularly lead markets to results that do not maximize welfare. He also argued that this meant, at least in theory, that well-placed government interventions could help correct these market failures. Stiglitz's work in this field has continued: he has just written (with Bruce Greenwald) Creating a Learning Society, a dense academic work on how government policy can help drive innovation in the age of the knowledge economy.

Stiglitz served as chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers in the Clinton administration, and then was the chief economist at the World Bank during the Asian financial crisis of the late 1990s. His experience there convinced him of the folly of much of the advice that Western economists had given developing countries, and in books like Globalization and Its Discontents (2002) he offered up a stinging critique of the way the US has tried to manage globalization, a critique that made him a cult hero in much of the developing world. In a similar vein, Stiglitz has been one of the fiercest critics of the way the Eurozone has handled the Greek debt crisis, arguing that the so-called troika's ideological commitment to austerity and its opposition to serious debt relief have deepened Greece's economic woes and raised the prospect that that country could face "depression without end." For Stiglitz, the fight over Greece's future isn't just about the right policy. It's also about "ideology and power." That perspective has also been crucial to his work on inequality. The Great Divide presents that work in Stiglitz's most popular—and most populist—voice. While Piketty's Capital is written in a cool, dispassionate tone, The Great Divide is clearly intended as a political intervention, and its tone is often impassioned and angry. As a collection of columns, The Great Divide is somewhat fragmented and repetitive, but it has a clear thesis, namely that inequality in the US is not an unfortunate by-product of a well-functioning economy. Instead, the enormous riches at the top of the income ladder are largely the result of the ability of the one percent to manipulate markets and the political process to their own benefit. (Thus, the title of his best-known Vanity Fair piece: “Of the 1 percent, by the 1 percent, for the 1 percent.”) Soaring inequality is a sign that American capitalism itself has gone woefully wrong. Indeed, Stiglitz argues, what we’re stuck with isn’t really capitalism at all, but rather an “ersatz” version of the system.

Inequality obviously has no single definition. As Stiglitz writes:

There are so many different parts to America’s inequality: the extremes of income and wealth at the top, the hollowing out of the middle, the increase of poverty at the bottom. Each has its own causes, and needs its own remedies.

But in The Great Divide, Stiglitz is mostly interested in one dimension of inequality: the gap between the people at the very top and everyone else. And his analysis of that gap concentrates on the question of why incomes at the top have risen so sharply, rather than why the incomes of everyone else have stagnated. While Stiglitz obviously recognizes the importance of the decline in union power, the impact of globalization on American workers, and the shrinking value of the minimum wage, his preoccupation here is primarily with why the rich today are so much richer than they used to be. To answer that question, you have to start by recognizing that the rise of high-end incomes in the US is still largely about labor income rather than capital income. Piketty’s book is, as the title suggests, largely about capital: about the way the concentration of wealth tends to reproduce itself, leading to greater and greater inequality. And this is an increasing problem in the US, particularly at the highest reaches of the income spectrum. But the main reason people at the top are so much richer these days than they once were (and so much richer than everyone else) is not that they own so much more capital: it’s that they get paid much more for their work than they once did, while everyone else gets paid about the same, or less. Corporate CEOs, for instance, are paid far more today than they were in the 1970s, while assembly line workers aren’t. And while incomes at the top have risen in countries around the world, nowhere have they risen faster than in the US.

One oft-heard justification of this phenomenon is that the rich get paid so much more because they are creating so much more value than they once did. Globalization and technology have increased the size of the markets that successful companies and individuals (like pop singers or athletes) can reach, so that being a superstar is more valuable than ever. And as companies have gotten bigger, the potential value that CEOs can add has increased as well, driving their pay higher.

Stiglitz will have none of this. He sees the boom in the incomes of the one percent as largely the result of what economists call “rent-seeking.” Most of us think of rent as the payment a landlord gets in exchange for the use of his property. But economists use the word in a broader sense: it’s any excess payment a company or an individual receives because something is keeping competitive forces from driving returns down. So the extra profit a monopolist earns because he faces no competition is a rent. The extra profits that big banks earn because they have the implicit backing of the government, which will bail them out if things go wrong, are a rent. And the extra profits that pharmaceutical companies make because their products are protected by patents are rents as well.

Not all rents are terrible for the economy—in some cases they’re necessary evils. We have patents, for instance, because we think that the costs of granting a temporary monopoly are outweighed by the benefits of the increased innovation that patent protection is supposed to encourage. But rents make the economy less efficient, because they move it away from the ideal of perfect competition, and they make consumers worse off. So from the perspective of the economy as a whole, rent-seeking is a waste of time and energy. As Stiglitz puts it, the economy suffers when “more efforts go into ‘rent seeking’—getting a larger slice of the country’s economic pie—than into enlarging the size of the pie.”

Rents are nothing new—if you go back to the 1950s, many big American corporations faced little competition and enjoyed what amounted to oligopolies. But there’s a good case to be made that the sheer amount of rent-seeking in the US economy has expanded over the years. The number of patents is vastly greater than it once was. Copyright terms have gotten longer. Occupational licensing rules (which protect professionals from competition) are far more common. Tepid antitrust enforcement has led to reduced competition in many industries. Most importantly, the financial industry is now a much bigger part of the US economy than it was in the 1970s, and for Stiglitz, finance profits are, in large part, the result of what he calls “predatory rent-seeking activities,” including the exploitation of uninformed borrowers and investors, the gaming of regulatory schemes, and the taking of risks for which financial institutions don’t bear the full cost (because the government will bail them out if things go wrong).

All this rent-seeking, Stiglitz argues, leaves certain industries, like finance and pharmaceuticals, and certain companies within those industries, with an outsized share of the rewards. And within those companies, the rewards tend to be concentrated as well, thanks to what Stiglitz calls “abuses of corporate governance that lead CEOs to take a disproportionate share of corporate profits” (another form of rent-seeking). In Stiglitz’s view of the economy, then, the people at the top are making so much because they’re in effect collecting a huge stack of rents.

This isn’t just bad in some abstract sense, Stiglitz suggests. It also hurts society and the economy. It erodes America’s “sense of identity, in which fair play, equality of opportunity, and a sense of community are so important.” It alienates people from the system. And it makes the rich, who are obviously politically influential, less likely to support government investment in public goods (like education and infrastructure) because those goods have little impact on their lives. (The one percent are, in fact, more likely than the general public to support cutting spending on things like schools and highways.)

More interestingly (and more contentiously), Stiglitz argues that inequality does serious damage to economic growth: the more unequal a country becomes, the slower it’s likely to grow. He argues that inequality hurts demand, because rich people consume less of their incomes. It leads to excessive debt, because people feel the need to borrow to make up for their stagnant incomes and keep up with the Joneses. And it promotes financial instability, as central banks try to make up for stagnant incomes by inflating bubbles, which eventually burst. (Consider, for instance, the toleration, and even promotion, of the housing bubble by Alan Greenspan when he was chairman of the Fed.) So an unequal economy is less robust, productive, and stable than it otherwise would be. More equality, then, can actually lead to more efficiency, not less. As Stiglitz writes, “Looking out for the other guy isn’t just good for the soul—it’s good for business.”

This explanation of both the rise in inequality and its consequences is quite neat, if also bleak. But it’s also, it has to be said, oversimplified. Take the question, for instance, of whether inequality really is bad for economic growth. It certainly seems plausible that it would be, and there are a number of studies that suggest it is. Yet exactly why inequality is bad for growth turns out to be hard to pin down—different studies often point to different culprits. And when you look at cross-country comparisons, it turns out to be difficult to prove that there’s a direct connection between inequality and the particular negative factors that Stiglitz cites. Among developed countries, more unequal ones don’t, as a rule, have lower levels of consumption or higher levels of debt, and financial crises seem to afflict both unequal countries, like the US, and more egalitarian ones, like Sweden.

This doesn’t mean that, as conservative economists once insisted, inequality is good for economic growth. In fact, it’s clear that US-style inequality does not help economies grow faster, and that moving toward more equality will not do any damage. We just can’t yet say for certain that it will give the economy a big boost.

Similarly, Stiglitz’s relentless focus on rent-seeking as an explanation of just why the rich have gotten so much richer makes a messy, complicated problem simpler than it is. To some degree, he acknowledges this: in The Price of Inequality, he writes, “Of course, not all the inequality in our society is the result of rent seeking.... Markets matter, as do social forces....” Yet he doesn’t really say much about either of those in The Great Divide. It’s unquestionably true that rent-seeking is an important part of the rise of the one percent. But it’s really only part of the story.

When we talk about the one percent, we’re talking about two groups of people above all: corporate executives and what are called “financial professionals” (these include people who work for banks and the like, but also money managers, financial advisers, and so on). These are the people that Piketty terms “supermanagers,” and he estimates that together they account for over half of the people in the one percent.

The emblematic figures here are corporate CEOs, whose pay rose 876 percent between 1978 and 2012, and hedge fund managers, some of whom now routinely earn billions of dollars a year. As one famous statistic has it, last year the top twenty-five hedge fund managers together earned more than all the kindergarten teachers in America did.

Stiglitz wants to attribute this extraordinary rise in CEO pay, and the absurd amounts of money that asset managers make, to the lack of good regulation. CEOs, in his account, are exploiting deficiencies in corporate governance—supine boards and powerless shareholders—to exploit shareholders and “appropriate for themselves firm revenues.” Money managers, meanwhile, are exploiting the ignorance of investors, reaping the benefits of what Stiglitz calls “uncompetitive and often undisclosed fees” to ensure that they get paid well even when they underperform.

The idea that high CEO pay is ultimately due to poor corporate governance is a commonplace, and certainly there are many companies where the relationship between the CEO and the board of directors (which in theory is supposed to be supervising him) is too cozy. Yet as an explanation for why CEOs get paid so much more today than they once did, Stiglitz’s argument is unsatisfying. After all, back in the 1960s and 1970s, when CEOs were paid much less, corporate governance was, by any measure, considerably worse than it is today, not better. As one recent study put it: Corporate boards were predominately made up of insiders...or friends of the CEO from the “old boys’ network.” These directors had a largely advisory role, and would rarely overturn or even mount major challenges to CEO decisions.

Shareholders, meanwhile, had fewer rights and were less active. Since then, we’ve seen a host of reforms that have given shareholders more power and made boards more diverse and independent. If CEO compensation were primarily the result of bad corporate governance, these changes should have had at least some effect. They haven’t. In fact, CEO pay has continued to rise at a brisk rate.

It’s possible, of course, that further reform of corporate governance (like giving shareholders the ability to cast a binding vote on CEO pay packages) will change this dynamic, but it seems unlikely. After all, companies with private owners—who have total control over how much to pay their executives—pay their CEOs absurd salaries, too. And CEOs who come into a company from outside—meaning that they have no sway at all over the board—actually get paid more than inside candidates, not less. Since 2010, shareholders have been able to show their approval or disapproval of CEO pay packages by casting nonbinding “say on pay” votes. Almost all of those packages have been approved by large margins. (This year, for instance, these packages were supported, on average, by 95 percent of the votes cast.) Similarly, while money managers do reap the benefits of opaque and overpriced fees for their advice and management of portfolios, particularly when dealing with ordinary investors (who sometimes don’t understand what they’re paying for), it’s hard to make the case that this is why they’re so much richer than they used to be. In the first place, opaque as they are, fees are actually easier to understand than they once were, and money managers face considerably more competition than before, particularly from low-cost index funds. And when it comes to hedge fund managers, their fee structure hasn’t changed much over the years, and their clients are typically reasonably sophisticated investors. It seems improbable that hedge fund managers have somehow gotten better at fooling their clients with “uncompetitive and often undisclosed fees.”

So what’s really going on? Something much simpler: asset managers are just managing much more money than they used to, because there’s much more capital in the markets than there once was. As recently as 1990, hedge funds managed a total of $38.9 billion. Today, it’s closer to $3 trillion. Mutual funds in the US had $1.6 trillion in assets in 1992. Today, it’s more than $16 trillion. And that means that an asset manager today can get paid far better than an asset manager was twenty years ago, even without doing a better job.

This doesn’t mean that asset managers or corporate executives “deserve” what they earn. In fact, there’s no convincing evidence that CEOs are any better, in relative terms, than they once were, and plenty of evidence that they are paid more than they need to be, in view of their performance. Similarly, asset managers haven’t gotten better at beating the market. The point, though, is that attributing the rise in their pay to corruption, or bad rules, doesn’t get us that far. More important, probably, has been the rise of ideological assumptions about the indispensability of CEOs, and changes in social norms that made it seem like executives should take whatever they could get. (Stiglitz alludes to these in The Price of Inequality, writing, “Norms of what was ‘fair’ changed, too.”) Discussions of shifts in norms often become what the economist Robert Solow once called a “blaze of amateur sociology.” But that doesn’t mean we can afford to ignore those shifts, either, since the rise of the one percent has been propelled by ideological changes as much as by economic or regulatory ones.

Complicating Stiglitz’s account of the rise of the one percent is not just an intellectual exercise. It actually has important consequences for thinking about how we can best deal with inequality. Strategies for reducing inequality can be generally put into two categories: those that try to improve the pretax distribution of income (this is sometimes called, clunkily, predistribution) and those that use taxes and transfers to change the post-tax distribution of income (this is what we usually think of as redistribution). Increasing the minimum wage is an example of predistribution. Medicaid is redistribution.

Stiglitz’s agenda for policy—which is sketched in The Great Divide, and laid out in comprehensive detail in Rewriting the Rules—relies on both kinds of strategies, but he has high hopes that better rules, designed to curb rent-seeking, will have a meaningful impact on the pretax distribution of income. Among other things, he wants much tighter regulation of the financial sector. He wants to loosen intellectual property restrictions (which will reduce the value of patents), and have the government aggressively enforce antitrust laws. He wants to reform corporate governance so CEOs have less influence over corporate boards and shareholders have more say over CEO pay. He wants to limit tax breaks that encourage the use of stock options. And he wants asset managers to “publicly disclose holdings, returns, and fee structures.” In addition to bringing down the income of the wealthiest Americans, he advocates measures like a higher minimum wage and laws encouraging stronger unions, to raise the income of ordinary Americans (though this is not the main focus of The Great Divide).

These are almost all excellent suggestions. And were they enacted, some—including above all tighter regulation of the financial industry—would have an impact on corporate rents and inequality. But it would be surprising if these rules did all that much to shrink the income of much of the one percent, precisely because improvements in corporate governance and asset managers’ transparency are likely to have a limited effect on CEO salaries and money managers’ compensation.

This is not a counsel of despair, though. In the first place, these rules would be good things for the economy as a whole, making it more efficient and competitive. More important, the second half of Stiglitz’s agenda—redistribution via taxes and transfers—remains a tremendously powerful tool for dealing with inequality. After all, while pretax inequality is a problem in its own right, what’s most destructive is soaring posttax inequality. And it’s posttax inequality that most distinguishes the US from other developed countries. As Stiglitz writes:

Some other countries have as much, or almost as much, before-tax and transfer inequality; but those countries that have allowed market forces to play out in this way then trim back the inequality through taxes and transfer and the provision of public services.

The redistributive policies Stiglitz advocates look pretty much like what you’d expect. On the tax front, he wants to raise taxes on the highest earners and on capital gains, institute a carbon tax and a financial transactions tax, and cut corporate subsidies. But dealing with inequality isn’t just about taxation. It’s also about investing. As he puts it, “If we spent more on education, health, and infrastructure, we would strengthen our economy, now and in the future.” So he wants more investment in schools, infrastructure, and basic research.

If you’re a free-market fundamentalist, this sounds disastrous—a recipe for taking money away from the job creators and giving it to government, which will just waste it on bridges to nowhere. But here is where Stiglitz’s academic work and his political perspective intersect most clearly. The core insight of Stiglitz’s research has been that, left on their own, markets are not perfect, and that smart policy can nudge them in better directions.

Indeed, Creating a Learning Society is dedicated to showing how developing countries can use government policy to become high-growth, knowledge-intensive economies, rather than remaining low-cost producers of commodities. What this means for the future of the US is only suggestive, but Stiglitz argues that it means the government should play a major role in the ongoing “structural transformation” of the economy.

Of course, the political challenge in doing any of this (let alone all of it) is immense, in part because inequality makes it harder to fix inequality. And even for progressives, the very familiarity of the tax-and-transfer agenda may make it seem less appealing. After all, the policies that Stiglitz is calling for are, in their essence, not much different from the policies that shaped the US in the postwar era: high marginal tax rates on the rich and meaningful investment in public infrastructure, education, and technology. Yet there’s a reason people have never stopped pushing for those policies: they worked. And as Stiglitz writes, “Just because you’ve heard it before doesn’t mean we shouldn’t try it again.”

Subject: Change the dynamics, shape the future

Dear John,

In 2006, the electoral work of the League of Conservation Voters helped elect 7 new Senators, and because of their wins, Senate leadership shifted to a pro-environment majority.

A year later, those leaders led the fight in the Senate to raise fuel efficiency standards. And for the first time in 32 years, fuel efficiency standards were increased.

That's what we do. With your support, we turn your environmental values into national priorities by lobbying for clean energy solutions, holding leaders accountable, and electing pro-environment candidates.

Change was the rallying cry in November. Now America is looking for results. Renew your LCV membership before Inauguration Day and help us pass the legislation we need to change to a clean energy economy.

LCV is uniquely positioned to make a difference in 2009. Our decades of experience on Capitol Hill ensures that our voice will be heard. With our renowned National Environmental Scorecard and network of 35 state league partners, we are the group most equipped to hold members of Congress accountable for their votes. And, we spent more money on elections than any other environmental group in 2008, helping to bring influential environmental leaders to Washington.

John, we can't do any of that without you.

Renew your LCV membership today and make a high-impact investment in the future of our planet.

In just five days we inaugurate our next President. Please stand with the League of Conservation Voters in this bright, new year.

Thank you for your support.

Sincerely,

Gene Karpinski

Subject: Your REL Appalachia Update December 2015

Director's Perspective: The Power of Partnerships

Partnerships have dotted our history for the formation of Google in 1998, Ben & Jerry in 1978, and Twitter in 2006, for example. Partnerships stand out as influential forces that have shaped the world we live in today and demonstrate the power of collaboration and joint effort toward a common goal.

Similarly, it is partnerships that support and enhance the work conducted not only by Regional Educational Laboratory (REL) Appalachia but RELs across the nation. Earlier this month I saw the power of partnerships during the meeting of REL Appalachia's Governing Board. A diverse and impressive group of people, including state and district education leaders from across the region, the board came together to share experiences and insights in order to benefit our common goal of improving public education both in REL Appalachia's four-state region and nationally.

Throughout the Governing Board Meeting, the importance of partnerships emerged as a common theme. It was apparent in the conversations with the board members, as well as the points raised by the meeting speakers. When Dr. Brenda Dann-Messier (principal research scientist with CNA and former U.S. Department of Education assistant secretary for career, technical, and adult education) and Dr. Deborah Delisle (executive director of ASCD and former U.S. Department of education assistant secretary for elementary and secondary education) facilitated a group conversation on preparing students for postsecondary education and careers, they emphasized the need for partnerships with policymakers and industry leaders in order to inform and support successful programs.

We see the importance of partnerships every day in our work. Our collaboration with the Tennessee Higher Education Commission, for instance, has been essential to our study on the college enrollment, persistence, and completion rates for Tennessee's 2007 high school graduates. Staff members at the Tennessee Higher Education Commission are co-principal investigators on the study and developed the research questions in partnership with REL Appalachia researchers.

While we are not revolutionizing the web, making ice cream, or sweeping the universe in 140 characters or less, I would argue that REL Appalachia, along with a community of thought-partners, is helping make a difference for future generations. This newsletter highlights our work for the coming year with a focus on the partnerships we have built across the region on critical education issues.

Equipping Middle School Educators to Teach Literacy and Numeracy

October 19, Roanoke, VA

Ninety educators from across Virginia participated in REL Appalachia's workshop on teaching critical literacy and numeracy skills to middle school students. The event was split into two sessions: one on literacy and one on numeracy. Dr. Amy Price Azano, an assistant professor of adolescent literacy at Virginia Tech, led the literacy session, sharing best practices for teaching literacy skills to students in rural America. Dr. John Woodward, dean of the School of Education at the University of Puget Sound, led the numeracy session and spotlighted foundational skills that students need for middle school mathematics. Both sessions were interactive and lively; teachers engaged in group discussions, worked on sample math problems, and even participated in a vocabulary role-playing game.

Here's what teachers are saying about the event:

"[This workshop] has been really exciting. I am now the instructional coach for Martinsville Middle School and I have learned a lot of strategies that I can take back to incorporate with our teachers to help students gain more insight on how to become better readers and to incorporate [it] into all subject areas."

-Regena Noel

Instructional Coach, Martinsville Public Schools

"I would recommend sessions like this to my colleagues. I think the hands-on experiences make you feel like a student and what the student would be experiencing as they try to solve problems within your own classroom."

Building Capacity for Action Research in Kentucky

October 12, Hazard, KY

REL Appalachia's ongoing partnership with the Kentucky Valley Educational Cooperative (KVEC), a member of REL Appalachia's Kentucky College and Career Readiness Alliance, to build capacity among KVEC educators to conduct action research included a train-the-trainer workshop October 12. "Innovation Coordinators" from KVEC's Appalachian Renaissance Initiative, who have been charged with supporting teachers in implementing action research, participated in the workshop. REL Appalachia researchers Patty Kannapel and Michael Flory partnered with KVEC staff Bernadette Carpenter and Abbie Combs to plan and present the workshop, which included materials and activities participants could use for training in their districts.

Two weeks later, Johnson County Public Schools innovation coordinator Noel Crum reported that the workshop had effectively prepared him to support teachers in his district:

"The train-the-trainer workshop that REL Appalachia and KVEC provided was one of the best I have attended, not only because it was so thorough, but because resources were provided in such a user-friendly manner that I could go back to my staff and present the training effectively. I consider myself a novice when it comes to action research, but I was able to take those materials back and feel comfortable replicating the training."

Marc Shepherd, a teacher at Johnson Central High School, joined the conversation to affirm that Mr. Crum had provided effective professional development:

"You did not seem like a novice. After the training, I thought, 'This is what we already do as teachers-try something new to see if it works better than what we did before.' With action research, it is just a matter of being a little more systematic."

Sneak Peak: Partnerships in 2016

After significant discussions with educators in each of our four states, REL Appalachia has developed several projects to meet the evolving needs of the region. Here is a preview of some of the work we plan to do in the coming year.

Improving Teaching and Learning through Action Research

"Action research" is a method by which individuals use research throughout the decision-making process to solve challenges they are facing. KVEC is currently engaged in an improvement initiative known as the "Appalachian Renaissance Initiative" (ARI). One of its key strategies is to encourage educators to implement innovative practices in the classroom and conduct action research to study the effectiveness of those practices.

In July 2015, REL Appalachia staff supported KVEC staff in developing a long-term plan for building local educators' capacity to conduct action research. REL Appalachia is working closely with KVEC to implement this plan in the 2015/16 school year through a series of workshops and meetings. REL Appalachia held the first workshop to train ARI support staff on October 12 and will hold two more over the course of the school year. In addition to these workshops, REL Appalachia will hold meetings with ARI staff and partners in postsecondary institutions to develop a plan to build educators' capacity to use action research.

Supporting the Appalachia Higher Education Consortium

In order for educators to be effective, it is essential that they possess the knowledge and skills necessary to teach rigorous standards and improve student outcomes. The Appalachia Higher Education Consortium (AHEC) is a REL Appalachia research alliance that provides a forum for leaders of preparation programs from across the region, as well as state officials, to consider how data and evidence can be applied to strengthen teacher preparation programs and the teaching profession, more broadly.

In 2016, REL Appalachia is facilitating a series of symposia for Consortium members. Each symposia will focus on a specific need expressed by Consortium members (for example, new teacher program accreditation under CAEP, implications of Title II regulatory changes, or preparing individuals to teach in low-performing schools). Members will have the opportunity to interact with national researchers and experts on these topics as well as hold. For more information about AHEC, please visit www.relappalachia.org/alliances/cross-state/.

New Report from CNA Education on Middle Appalachia

CNA Education recently released the report Appalachia Rising, a systematic review of 20 years of education research on the region that the authors call "Middle Appalachia."

The report provides a detailed and nuanced picture of education, spotlighting five topics of regional and national priority: college and career readiness, educator effectiveness, access to high-quality curriculum and instruction, systemic capacity, and health and wellness. It also considers the region-specific dynamics that influence them. Key among those is Appalachian culture, which affects student achievement, aspirations, and support.

Overall, the findings suggest that Middle Appalachia is closing education and economic gaps between it and other parts of the country, but that much work still needs to be done in order to provide equitable opportunities to all students.

Subject: The New VA Secretary, and How You Can Help

Dear VoteVets.org Supporter,
Yesterday, President-Elect Obama introduced General Eric Shinseki as his choice to head up the Department of Veterans Affairs. To us, this signals that the President-Elect will not accept a veterans care system that has been lacking, nor will he relegate the Department to second-class status in his cabinet.

If there are two things everyone knows about General Shinseki, they are that he always thinks ahead to what needs may be down the road, and is not afraid to strongly speak his mind to the President of the United States. Those are two crucial qualities we veterans need in a Veterans Affairs Secretary right now.

General Shinseki, as a wounded warrior himself, knows what injured troops and veterans have to go through. At the same time, he comes to the VA with fresh eyes. We have no doubt that he'll make some very forward-looking assessments of the department, and advocate strongly for the needs of today's veterans.

If you are a veteran, or deal with veterans care, we'd like to hear from you, and we'll pass along your concerns to the incoming administration. What do you like or not like about the Department of Veterans Affairs? What do you feel are the most pressing issues it faces? Have you heard about developments in physical or mental care that the VA doesn't offer, but you think it should? Send your thoughts to info@votevets.org, with "VA Suggestions" in the subject line, so we can keep track. We'll compile your thoughts and pass them along to the transition team.

Thanks for all of your support, and we look forward to hearing from you.

How's Hillary doing? Wish we could tell you

CNBC.com

By John Harwood

29 Mins Ago

<http://www.cnbc.com/id/102717374>

I've been inside Hillary Clinton's national campaign headquarters in Brooklyn.

I've talked with "senior officials" about her bid for the White House. They sat in these chairs.

Wish I could tell you more. But they said very little.

Notice that I typed very little and not "very little," because under the ground rules of Thursday's briefing reporters were not allowed to quote their words directly.

You're not missing much.

The former secretary of state plans to kick off the heavy-rhetoric stage of her campaign on June 13. I can't say where or what time because the senior officials wouldn't say.

She plans to lay out some policy proposals after that. Can't say which ones.

She'll take questions from reporters. Can't say how often.

She'll start having rallies. Not too many, because the election's a long way away. But some.

She might take a summer vacation, which means reporters covering her can, too. Don't know when, but one senior official observed that summer vacations traditionally occur in mid-August.

Her aides are organizing furiously in the early battlegrounds of the nomination fight (Iowa, New Hampshire, Nevada, South Carolina) because they are competing in every state. They take the primary challenges of Bernie Sanders, Martin O'Malley and perhaps others very seriously.

They are also taking their Republican opposition very seriously—some in the sprawling GOP field more seriously than others. Can't specify which ones.

They are raising lots and lots of money and are pleased with how much is pouring in. But they absolutely, positively are NOT seeking to raise $2 billion, which some journalists have reported is their goal.

They are building a large digital constituency for their efforts to communicate and mobilize voters on social media. Are they starting with the lists from President Barack Obama's organization, and Hillary Clinton's 2008 campaign? Can't say for sure, but they're exploring lots of lists.

Her husband, Bill, and daughter, Chelsea, will play roles in her campaign. Can't say exactly what, or when.

She's feeling more in control of her campaign effort this time around, unlike 2008 when she sometimes felt the campaign was controlling her.

Controversies over her emails as secretary of state or the Clinton Foundation have not inflicted significant political damage. That's because voters who might support her see the controversies as politically motivated.

She might even be able to expand the roster of battleground states beyond those Obama targeted. Can't say which ones.

I'd show you pictures of the office and desks where campaign officials do their jobs, but the post-briefing tour was deemed off-the-record.

There will be more briefings, however. Stay tuned.

If you want a brilliant moment and a powerful intervention, here is today's suggestion

This is on the section 716 story – i.e., repealing part of Dodd-Frank through the House budget. As I mentioned yesterday, Tom Hoenig – put in at the FDIC by the Republicans and one of our best regulators – is opposed to this repeal

<http://baselinescenario.com/2014/12/10/dont-repeal-swaps-push-out-requirements-section-716-of-dodd-frank/>

Why are the House Republicans not supporting him?

Tom is consistently right analytically and has great judgment on how to affect policy. Also, regulators see what is really happening, through access to detailed data, in ways that legislators and others on the outside cannot

This is not a left vs. right issue. This is those in favor of financial stability vs. the lobby (mostly Citigroup, to be frank)

My proposal is to say or otherwise communicate in public simply this thought: "Tom Hoenig is an experienced and responsible regulator. I don't understand why the House Republicans would abandon and undermine him in this way". It could also be tweeted as a question

This would demonstrate an attention to detail and political nuance that would gain great traction

Thanks

Simon

Subject: what would President Trump do?

Dear John,

This is alarming news. For the first time ever, it looks like Republicans in Congress will pass a bill to dismantle Obamacare and defund Planned Parenthood that will actually make it to the President's desk. Thankfully, President Obama will veto the bill, but would a President Bush, or a President Cruz or God forbid - a President Trump?

I know a lot of attention is spent on the Presidential race, but Congress matters. Send me there and I will take on the Republican extremists in the House who would strip away healthcare from thousands of Maryland's families in order to give massive tax breaks to millionaires and billionaires like Jeb Bush and Donald Trump.

Click below to watch our newest Glenn on the Trail video we put together pledging my support to expand Obamacare, but we need you to take part too.

Sign our petition here and let Republicans in Congress know you won't stand for this.

I stand with President Obama in opposing Republican attempts to take away healthcare from hundreds of thousands of women and families in Maryland. You should too.

Help us take on these Radical Republicans by signing our petition to support women and families in Maryland here.

Let's win this fight,

Glenn

All,

Attached are revised guides. Sorry to get them out so late, but we did a lot of revising of the messaging and tried to incorporate as much feedback as possible. Please try and get us additional comments as soon as possible, tonight or early tomorrow morning.

Some changes can certainly be made on the fly, but the handouts at least really need to be finalized by noon tomorrow.

Thanks, Kristi

Subject: 3047-Join Us for Speaking at the 6th Low Carbon & Green Growth Earth Summit (LCGGES-2016)

Dear John Podesta,

On behalf of the Organizing Committee, it is a great honor for me to welcome you to join BIT's 6th Low Carbon & Green Growth Earth Summit (LCGGES-2016) as a Speaker in GG108:Low Carbon & Clean Technology of Forum GG1: Mitigation & Adaption, with 30-July 3, 2016 in Korea International Exhibition & Conference Center (KINTEX), Gyeonggi-do, South Korea.

As low carbon economy has become a hot topic in both academia and industrial world for decades, recently a series of carbon technology, carbon footprint, green growth, and new energy have become more and more crucial in the process as time goes by. People are thinking about new approaches to fix up the relationship between human and the environment. With the theme of New Catalysts for Innovative Sustainable Economic Development, I believe LCGGES-2016 will become a fantastic event. Attendees will benefit from a great value and an excellent opportunity to meet the scholars, businessmen, government officials, and industrial stakeholders from both developed and developing countries to understand latest technologies, innovative achievements and ongoing researches, thus to discuss future directions in the area of low carbon development, renewable technology, new energy, bioenergy, climate change, etc.

The conference will be held in Gyeonggi-do, a beautiful area of South Korea with full of historical sight spots and culture around. The event venue, KINTEX, serves a wonderful place to stage the conference, which has spacious site and meeting facilities for both the conference and social events.

I hope that you could show your enthusiasm and make contributions to this event. And I hope you would have an enjoyable stay in Gyeonggi-do, South Korea.

Sincerely yours,

Subject: HFA finance mtg. in Geneva
Attachments: JDP stump bullets.docx

Hi John-

Over the weekend Sara and I have been working to set up a casual HFA finance meeting in Geneva in the late afternoon before the Climate Works board dinner. We've been working with Giulia Marchiori Ceresal, our European deputy finance director. Sorry for not flagging for you sooner, but the event came together at the very last minute-- Giulia wasn't sure she could find an appropriate location that would be convenient to your Climate Works dinner.

Her proposed venue would be about a 30 minute taxi ride from your Climate Works dinner-- HFA will pay for transport. It is a conference room at an American law firm Wilk Auslander LLP (Rue Pécolat 5, 1201 Genève, Switzerland). The group would be small (8-10 expats) and the format will be a mix and mingle with informal remarks. Apparently although it is a law firm conference room, it is a very informal setup (with a fireplace and sofas, etc.). Giulia will send us exact details in her briefing tomorrow.

We did not raise for this. This is just a meet-and-greet with current donors and prospects to identify leadership when we plan to return for significant fundraising in the next quarter.

I know that you left the office without your stump speech cards, so I have reattached that text for you. Giulia can print these and bring to you (I will ask if she can do vertical speech cards).

Giulia will be Geneva for the day and to run logistics. She is working on a full brief and will send first thing tomorrow morning-- including Q&A for Dems Abroad. Below is the proposed tick-tock, with drive times & flight info.

Does this plan sound OK to you?

I dont know if you get these! Im a friend of John West in Houston Tx-he met you in Chicago-a super volunteer!

In 08 I was hillary's lead organizer for Houston Tx. And she personally before the party here embraced me and honored me for all I did!

I 2 x this round submitted resumes to no avail-I have a large following here-large. Burns Strider and others have fought for me to have a role here. So far no avail. Surely a great mna like you can help make sure my name isnt forgotten?!

Hillary is in houston tmrw-it breaks my heart I cant be there-Im broke from all the hard work I do right now. She means so much to my career etc.. Hope you can help me somehow friend in these issues-Art Pronin, Pres Meyerland Area Democrats-largest in tx Great, thanks! I'll take a look.

Jean Ross , who heads their government transparency and accountability issues in the United States, came to our convening at Yale on how economic inequality affects political outcomes. She was so interested in our work that she asked for a proposal for some of her remaining 2015 funds (about $150k). I told her we also wanted to talk about a grant across Ford programs and she was happy to talk about contributing to that as well. We need to finish this 5 year budget so we can start the larger conversation with them, but wanted to share that with you.

The grassroots power of this campaign continues to amaze me.

A few days ago, I more than doubled our grassroots fundraising goal to $25,000. Last night, because of people like you, we passed it.

Saturday's fundraising deadline is critical to our campaign. That's why I'm now asking if you can help us get to $30,000 by midnight tomorrow. That's only 34 hours away.

Can you give \$500, right now, to help us get to \$30,000 by tomorrow night?

I'm pushing hard this week because the more resources we have when the Saturday deadline hits, the better we'll be able to plan for the rest of the campaign. We'll know how many supplies we can buy for future phone banks, how many signs we'll be able to print, and how effectively we'll be able to spread our message on television and radio.

I know you've donated in the past -- can you give \$500, right now, so we have the resources we'll need to win in the runoff?

I'm so grateful for all you've done already. Every donation helps me to keep going, criss-crossing Los Angeles and talking to people about what's at stake in this election.

While it was permitted to use private email, and others like Colin Powell did it, it wasn't the best choice as she has said, she should have used two systems, but on the more serious allegation, she never sent classified information and she never received any information marked classified. She's asked that the emails be released and no matter how much Republicans pile on with investigation after investigation, when the process is completed and they are released they will show that she was a fierce and effective advocate for America and American values across the globe.

Dear John,

I wanted to share this email from Tammy Duckworth below, about the huge news that the ban on women in combat has been lifted by President Obama!

Take a moment to read it and click the link to stand with President Obama and Secretary Panetta.

It was just last year that Rick Santorum said, "I do have concerns about women in front line combat... people naturally may do things that may not be in the interests of the mission because of other types of emotions that are involved."

Saying women would endanger a mission because of their "emotions" is offensive, and has been proven wrong. But it's the kind of stuff that will start being spouted from the right. That's why it's important for you to stand up for women in the military, against this nonsense.

See the email below, and thanks for your support.

Dear Jon,

Great news - yesterday, the Pentagon announced an end to the ban on women in combat, finally allowing our military to fully benefit from the talents of women who want to serve and defend our great nation.

Please join me in thanking Defense Secretary Leon Panetta for lifting the ban on women in combat. Click here to automatically sign our card.

When we as a nation lift restrictions and allow people to serve based on their performance, we benefit from it. That was true when President Truman desegregated the military, allowing African-Americans to serve as equals. It was true when President Obama ended "Don't Ask, Don't Tell," allowing our gay and lesbian service members to serve openly. And it is true now.

As a Veteran who saw combat action, I know firsthand that America's daughters are just as capable of defending liberty as her sons. Allowing our women in uniform to serve fully is a win for our nation.

- Tammy

P.S. This decision still needs to be implemented and it's important for Pentagon leaders to know that you support ending the ban. Please click here to thank Secretary Panetta now.

SCND OPINION

SC New Democrats' President Phil Noble's weekly column is distributed by the South Carolina Press Association.

Ban the Presbyterians

"There is a dangerous, revolutionary group that has a long history of violence and is driven by a fanatical religious belief that they were chosen by God. They have infiltrated our state and country and are a threat to our way of life and our very existence. We must, at a minimum, make those who are here register, establish surveillance on their places of worship and keep others from coming to our country. I'm talking about the Presbyterians."

Tribes, South Carolina, and Politics

"All of us are members of a tribe; in fact we are all a member of a number of tribes. Our tribal affiliations are based on geography, race, school, class, education, and on and on it goes."

BRIGHT SPOTS

Every day, regular people are working to make our state a better place.

Bipartisan Collaboration to Move the State Forward

"Legislators from both sides of the aisle urged to see similar cooperation next year from the General Assembly as it did in the aftermath of the Emanuel AME tragedy. The give-and-take between Democrats and Republicans will be vital if the state hopes to finally fix crumbling infrastructure, they said during the Columbia Regional Business Report's quarterly "Power Breakfast" networking event at the Columbia Marriott."

Closing the Loophole Allowing Dylan Roof to Buy Gun

"Proposals by a Democratic senator and Republican House member would extend to 28 days the allowed time for reviewing criminal records. Rep. Doug Brannon said when he learned Roof should not have been allowed to buy the gun, 'I was sickened to my stomach.'"

POLITICS AS USUAL

More evidence that here in South Carolina, our government is broken and our politics is corrupt.

Corrections Officials Deny Illegally Obtaining Lethal Injection Drugs

"In response to the shortage [of lethal injection drugs], many states - including South Carolina - have pushed for secrecy laws that would shield the identity of the drugs' manufacturers, said Robert Dunham, executive director of the Death Penalty Information Center, an organization that opposes capital punishment. Instead of protecting the identity of drug manufacturers, secrecy laws have been used by states to prevent the public and the drug manufacturers themselves from learning that the states have obtained the drugs for lethal injection purposes, Dunham said."

10/18/2016

\$5.3 Million on Confederate Flag Display?

"Consultants are proposing spending $5.3 million in tax money on a museum display of the Confederate battle flag removed from the Statehouse grounds. The plan includes expanding the S.C. Confederate Relic Room and Military Museum into a nearly 4,700-square-foot space above the current museum, stairs to the second floor, an extension to the entrance, and renovation of an outdoor courtyard adjacent to the proposed new gallery space."

GET INVOLVED

We'd Love To Hear From You

Subject: "Indefinite" attacks

Hi there,

"Indefinite."

My opponent Ken Cuccinelli just released a new ad — as brutal as it is misleading about my record — and the Associated Press reports it's set for "indefinite broadcast" across Virginia.

Cuccinelli's deep-pocketed allies like the Republican Governors Association and the Koch Brothers are making sure Virginia voters will see the attack over and over again by making six and seven-figure donations to Cuccinelli's campaign.

Their dishonest and "indefinite" attacks could drown us out if we can't reach our Rapid Response Fund goal before the end of August when our next financial report is due — right now we're $125,000 short.

Will you donate \$5 today to make sure we raise the last \$125,000 into our Rapid Response Fund by the end of August?

Just this weekend, Republican Lt. Governor Bill Bolling said "there are a lot of Republicans in Virginia who are not happy with the Republican nominee for governor."

Mainstream Republicans are fighting to distance themselves from Cuccinelli's extreme brand of right-wing ideology. And this week the latest longtime member of the Republican Party endorsed my candidacy. They know that I bring strong business experience to the table, and I'll pursue commonsense solutions to the challenges we face as a Commonwealth.

Cuccinelli's outrageous negative ads are a desperate attempt to smear my business record, and if we want to win this election, I'm going to have to fight back — both by continuing to lay out a clear, positive vision for Virginia's future and by telling the truth about my business record.

I won't be able to achieve both of those goals if we fall short of funding our Rapid Response Fund. Can I count on you to help me get there?

Donate \$5 right now to make sure we hit our goal of raising \$125,000 into our Rapid Response Fund by the end of August.

It means a lot that you continue to step up when it matters.

Thanks for helping me fight,

- Terry

What Does it Take? Advocates Call for Reform on Ohio Charter Schools

Educators, students and advocates call for change following mounting of evidence of poor-performing schools

STATEHOUSE, Columbus - Educators, students and other advocates of a strong public school system took to the Ohio Statehouse steps today to ask our officeholders, "What does it take?"

In the past two months alone, there has been overwhelming evidence that charter schools operated by Concept Schools and affiliated with the Gulen Movement have failed to provide a quality education to Ohio students and instead have been rampant with sexism, racism, mismanagement, test-tampering and other illegal activity.

The FBI last month raided 19 Gulen-affiliated schools in Ohio and two other states; former teachers at a Gulen school presented testimony to the Ohio State Board of Education highlighting instances of cheating, racism and sexism in the classroom. And the state's top education official launched an apparent cover-up of test tampering and other irregularities witnessed by a teacher even earlier.

Today, only one school is being investigated by the Ohio Department of Education but the agency is seeking to punish the whistleblowers for reporting allegations to school administrators, not law enforcement.

"What Does it Take... to say enough," asked Maureen Reedy, co-founder of Ohio Friends of Public Education and a past Teacher of the Year in Ohio. "Our state has been branded as the "Wild, Wild West of Charter Schools" by the National Association of Charter School Authorizers."

She cited a Columbus Dispatch report showing that 87 percent of the nearly 100,000 students attending Ohio charters are in schools graded D or F by the state.

"This is a public outcry for legislative oversight," she said.

Speakers at today's rally highlighted their personal experiences with poor-performing charters and called on state leaders to enact comprehensive charter school accountability and transparency. They included:

Mary Addi, former Cleveland Gulen school employee who witnessed illegal activities, sexism and racism among charter school operators:

“Although, we respect all religious rights and cultural diversity, we Americans are not being conscientious stewards of our constitution or our tax dollars if we allow this network of charter schools to continue.”

Cierra Florence, former student of Dayton Horizon Science Academy who was taught by Melissa Randolph and others who provided testimony to the Ohio State Board of Education but now face possible sanctions:

“Good teachers change lives. Miss Randolph and some of the other good teachers saved my life.” They took her in when she was 17, pregnant and homeless, and helped her graduate on time. “It is sad for the other students that these teachers left the school. It is even sadder that the Ohio Department of Education feels the need to try and punish these teachers for doing what’s right.”

Representative Fred Strahorn (D-Dayton), who sent a letter asking the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, Office of Civil Rights, to investigate Ohio’s Gulen-affiliated schools:

“I am concerned that school administrators and state officials have ignored these complaints for too long. They must not be ignored by those who protect our civil rights.”

Michelle VanVleet, former English teacher at Dayton Horizon Science Academy, provided a written statement:

“I read with great sadness that the Ohio Department of Education believes the problems they (the teachers) identified are unique to the Dayton school. They are not.” Earlier this year, the school’s own Dean of Students passed out a memo that confirmed much of the information the teachers provided to the state school board, but also reported “condoms in the hall” and sex in the in-school suspension room. “It is clear from news stories across the country, my dealings with the school and conversations with other teachers that the problems are more systemic.”

As the scandals mount, legislators are on recess and two charter school accountability bills have been awaiting acting. Both are sponsored by Senate Minority Leader Joe Schiavoni, a Democrat from Boardman.

Senate Bill 190 is a comprehensive piece of legislation that requires charter schools to abide by many of the same accountability standards as traditional public districts.

Senate Bill 329 requires all charter school sponsors and operators to abide by audit and public records law just as traditional public districts do.

Reedy said recent comments by Senate Education Committee Chair Peggy Lehner, a Kettering Republican, give her new hope that reforms are likely. Lehner responded to the Gulen charter school Scandal with a pledge for a comprehensive review of charter school oversight, according to the Dayton Daily News.

Hello John,

If I do this talk for Erica Payne's group, I'd like to piggy back it with some foundation meetings with you in NYC -- Ford, Rockefeller. Would you be okay with me working with Eryn to find possible dates for these meetings, when it would be convenient for you?

Thank you,
Heather

Heather –

I am ccing Chuck Collins above – he is on the board of the Patriotic Millionaires which is a group I run in addition to the Breakfast Series.

I told Chuck that I had reached out to you about the Series and he said y'all were just at the Oxfam retreat together. We were thinking you speaking maybe with Xavier from Ford would be interesting as well!

Heather!

10/18/2016

The event can be held on a day that works for you. It will be in NYC in the breakfast hour. You will be the headliner at the second event of the (NEW) New York Breakfast Series. The purpose of the series is to create a well-connected interdisciplinary community of common purpose by facilitating a regular forum for discussion around public policy and political strategy. Maureen White, Gail Furman and I ran a series like this for 2 years in advance of 2008 and it proved to be incredibly popular and quite productive. We will hit a variety of topics over the course of the next 18 months – and will do so through the breakfasts as well as through other forum like book parties, salon dinners, and private movie screenings. We have a great host committee funding the series (if you scroll down to my initial email to you, you will see the list). We also have a great group of leaders in our “kitchen cabinet” advising us on topics and speakers and invitees (Michael Waldman, Cecile Richards, Rev. Dr. Katherine Henderson and several others). We are kicking off the series with Greg Speed (America Votes) and Page Gardner (Voter Participation Center) giving us an overview of the political landscape – key constituencies, key geographic locations, recent polling, etc. That’s a drill down session – for you, I was thinking we should pull the lens back and do a really meaty session almost around political philosophy – the “why” of all of this work. You can talk about how the country’s economic structure upholds or diminishes its stated principles, key areas of work to creating greater shared prosperity. I was thinking of partnering you with Michael Waldman potentially to have him talk about political inequality and how that feeds into poverty and economic inequality. I was also thinking Rev. Dr. Henderson would be a good partner with you to take your discussion towards even higher purpose. I’m really flexible – and happy to do pretty much whatever you would like to do! Those are just some initial thoughts. If you are up for doing it, I will just coordinate your schedule with Michael or Katherine’s (or someone else you would suggest) and we will go from there!

Call anytime to discuss 917-239-6065 is my cell or office is 202-446-0489.

She probably does know about the Patriotic Millionaires but if not, it is a group of more than 200 millionaires who among other things want to pay higher taxes, pay higher wages and get money out of politics – They have quite the media reach. I've enclosed an overview of the group – I've enclosed the long version for your reading pleasure but the first 2 pages really sum it up. The Chair of the group was on John Stewart a couple of weeks ago, Bloomberg just did a big article about them, etc

Hi Erica,

Ed Paisley here, the managing director at Equitable Growth. Thanks so much for this invite for Heather. It sounds like a great series. Alas, Heather is either out of town on vacation or engaged in conferences on the West Coast and New England until the second week of May so she would not be able to attend the opening of the series. I can check with her about later in the series and get back to you if that works for you.

I'm not familiar with Patriot Millionaires but I'm sure Heather is. I'll raise this with her as well.

Thanks again for the invite and apologies I can't commit her to anything just yet due to her travel schedule.

Ed

Dear Heather,

I hope you're doing well. I am writing on behalf of David desJardins, Gail Furman, Anne Hess and Craig Kaplan, Larry Hui, Christal Jackson, Sarah and Victor Kovner, Rebecca Mai and David Mitnick, Keith Mestrich, Morris and Barbara Pearl, Great Neck Richman, Vin Roberti, Paul Rudd, Claire Silberman, and Lisa Steglich to invite you to speak at the Kick-Off of the (NEW) New York Breakfast Series sometime in the next few weeks – we can schedule at your convenience.

This series marks the return of an incredibly successful effort that Gail Furman and Maureen White and I ran from 2006-2009, engaging and connecting New York influencers in advance of the 2008 presidential race. That series included a monthly breakfast as well as salon dinners, book discussions, and private movie screenings. Notable gatherings from the last series included: a dinner with President Clinton the evening he returned from negotiating the release of the North Korean hostages; a breakfast with Gen. Paul Eaton, Gen. Rick Sanchez, and Gen. Wesley Clark around torture and national security; and a series of strategic electorally-oriented discussions with top organization leaders including: Cecile Richards (Planned Parenthood), David Brock (Media Matters), and Greg Speed (America Votes).

This new Series promises to be equally engaging, and we are certain it will become a pivotal hub for discussion and engagement leading up to 2016. As with the last Series, a monthly breakfast will serve as the anchor gathering for the event, which will also include small dinners, book receptions, and private screenings.

We were lucky enough to have John Podesta speak at a breakfast during the last series. I have contacted his office as well (and have cced Eryn Sepp above). I was thinking it would be wonderful if you all could speak together at this first breakfast – or, if John is not available, perhaps we could pair you with Michael Waldman from the Brennan Center.

Your participation would be such a wonderful way to launch this new effort.

An important note, the host committee members fervently hope the series will provide an opportunity for the various elements of our political coalition to come together towards the larger goal we all share. Your participation at this first breakfast will be a wonderful way to set the stage for unified engagement and activity.

Can you please let me know soon if you will be able to join us? Either at this first one or at a session later?

I also wanted to mention that in addition to running this series and an organization called the Agenda Project, I am also the Founder and Chief Strategist for the Patriotic Millionaires with whom you may be familiar. I occurred to me that we could perhaps take a few minutes to talk about how the work of the Center for Equitable Growth could be enhanced by the efforts of the Patriotic Millionaires. The group is undergoing a major expansion and is greatly expanding its portfolio of work. HERE is a highlight reel of their media work. Many members of the host committee for the Breakfast Series are also members of the Patriotic Millionaires.

I am available anytime on my cell (917) 239-6065 to discuss further.

Warmly,

Erica

Subject: Re: CLIP | The New Republic: Feminist Gloria Steinem says young women support Bernie because they want attention from boys.

Here are a few examples of her praising Bernie supporters:

Clinton On Sanders Supporters: "I Am Truly Glad That You Are Involved In This Process... I Learned What You All Are Proving Every Day. You Can Make Change Without Being Elected To Anything... So I Respect Not Only Your Enthusiasm But Also Your Seriousness About Helping To Make Our Country What It Can And Should Be." HILLARY CLINTON: We Democrats face a big choice on Tuesday, and I want to take a minute right now to speak to all the young people who are here, whether they are supporting me or whether they are supporting Senator Sanders. Now, of course, I still hope to persuade those who are supporting Senator Sanders to give me another look, but I want you to know that I am truly glad that you are involved in this process and in the Democratic Party. You are bringing energy, ideas, and urgency to our shared causes. And I can't help but think about how I felt when I first came to New Hampshire in 1968 to campaign for my presidential candidate, Gene McCarthy, to end the war in Vietnam. (Applause.) And in the following years I went all over our country trying in my own way to make things better. I went undercover in Alabama to expose racism in the schools. I drove throughout south Texas registering Latino voters. And I even shocked my friends by moving to Arkansas with my then boyfriend, because we were in love and so fired up to do good work there. And I learned what you all are proving every day. You can make change without being elected to anything. You just need to go do it. So I respect not only your enthusiasm but also your seriousness about helping to make our country what it can and should be. And that's why I want to take just a few minutes to make my case for why I believe at this time I am the better choice to be your president. [McIntyre-Shaheen 100 Club Celebration, 2/5/16]

Clinton: "I Want To Say A Word To The Extraordinary People, Particularly Young People, Who Are Supporting Senator Sanders. I Know You May Not Be For Me Now, But I Am For You." HILLARY CLINTON: And I want to say a word – I want to say a word to the extraordinary people, particularly young people, who are supporting Senator Sanders. I know you may not be for me now, but I am for you. (Applause.) And I will work hard for you, and I will be a president who puts your futures at the top of our national priorities. And I want you to know that what I said in the debate last night – that I will call Senator Sanders, the first call I will make – if I'm so fortunate as to get this nomination so we can turn our attention to what we really need to do, make sure we don't get a Republican back in the White House. (Cheers.) I will call because I want him to be our partner, all of these great members of Congress, these leaders before you. We do have to take on income inequality. We do have to create more good jobs. We do have to have campaign finance reform. We have a lot of work to do. I look forward to working with him as a partner in the Senate. [Women For Hillary GOTV Event, 2/5/16]

Clinton To Children Of A Supporter Who Were "Feeling The Bern": "Tell Them I'm Glad They're Interested In Politics, And I Really Mean That. I Want Them To Be Involved. I Want Them To Feel Like I Felt When I Was That Age, Some Years Ago, And Getting Excited And Interested In Politics For The First Time." JULIE CARNIGAN, NEW HAMPSHIRE RESIDENT: Hi. Thank you for taking my question. I'm the proud mother of five girls, two of my own, three step-daughters. And unfortunately they are all "feeling the Bern." And I would like to know what you would do to convince them to vote for you. CLINTON: How old are they? CARNIGAN: They're in their -- 21, 22, and a couple of 23s and a 25-year-old. (LAUGHTER) CLINTON: Well, first of all, tell them I'm glad they're interested in politics, and I really mean that. I want them to be involved. I want them to feel like I felt when I was that age, some years ago, and getting excited and interested in politics for the first time. [CNN Democratic Town Hall, 2/3/16]

Feminist Gloria Steinem says young women support Bernie because they want attention from boys.

By Elizabeth Bruenig

The New Republic

February 6, 2016

Steinem dropped the notion during an interview on Bill Maher's show, in the context of a broader discussion of this season's Democratic primary. Discussing Clinton and Sanders's respective support bases during the Friday night interview, Steinem said:

"Women are more for [Clinton] than men are. ...First of all, women get more radical as we get older, because we experience. ...Not to over-generalize, but ... men tend to get more conservative because they gain power as they age, women get more radical because they lose power as they age.

And, when you're young, you're thinking, where are the boys? The boys are with Bernie..."

Maher then joked that he wouldn't be allowed to say such a thing, lest Steinem slap him, because chalking young women's politics up to their desire to meet boys actually is a profoundly sexist thing to do. (It's also the case that people don't appear to radicalize, or change much at all politically, strictly due to age.) It's just too bad that insight had to come from Bill Maher instead of Gloria Steinem.

Meanwhile, one wonders why Sanders has support at all-women's colleges like Wellesley when there are few cute boys around to impress, and why Steinem once declared Bernie Sanders an "honorary woman" to endorse him in a 1996 race against a Republican woman. If Steinem has radicalized with age, her remarks about young women's politics certainly don't show it.

Dear Friend,

We hugely underestimated the popularity of our U.N. Bicycle Ambassador shirts. We sold out our original inventory in only two days, and had to make more just to cover all the orders! Don't miss your chance to get the most sought-after memorabilia of the 2010 Colorado elections -- once this batch of shirts is gone, that's it.

Dear Neighbor,

Denver has a great new bicycle-sharing program—you may have heard of it, or seen those red bikes with evil capitalist advertising on them. Tea Party candidate Dan Maes says it's a giant conspiracy to turn Denver into a "United Nations community."

So we thought, why not? Every United Nations community has to have a uniform. So we made these handsome t-shirts to kick off our U.N. Bicycle Ambassador program.

Contribute \$25 and get one today !

"This is all very well disguised, but it will be exposed," Maes said. So we're blowing the lid right off this conspiracy. Get your sublime azure blue, 100% cotton U.N Bicycle Ambassador t-shirt today.

Dan Maes says this plot is "bigger than it looks like on the surface." And you will be too, in a fantastically slimming U.N. Bicycle Ambassador t-shirt!

This limited edition t-shirt is available in men's and women's sizes. Get yours now ! As soon as Glenn Beck finds out, the gig is up!

DOS Response Letter to Grassley.pdf

DOS SGE's 2008 to 2013 -- Released by DOS Jan 2014.pdf

FOIA Chart.xlsx

As Cheryl mentioned earlier today, attached and below are the materials we put together re FOIA, email, and SGE's. These were shared with Miguel.

Let me know if you have any questions or if there is any other information that may be useful.

I will be attending the hearing on Wed so can keep you all posted in real-time and/or brief afterwards if anything interesting comes up.

Thx

FOIA

Attachments:

1. Department's annual reports to Congress on FOIA -- <http://foia.state.gov/Learn/Reports.aspx>
2. Summary sheet on FOIA data from 2005 to 2014.

Points

- The State Department is often the agency of first resort for requests for foreign policy and national security information.
- The Department takes FOIA requests very seriously, and has a rigorous process in place for handling the tens of thousands of requests that come in. Secretary Clinton's State Department made doing so a priority.
- The total number of FOIA requests the Department receives annually has drastically increased over the last 10 years -- with the largest increases occurring when Secretary Clinton took office. From 2008 to 2009, the number of FOIA requests nearly doubled from 5,864 to 10,675 per year and continued to increase during her time in office and beyond. By 2014, the Department received 19,625 requests.
- During her tenure, from 2009 to 2012, the number of requests went from 10,675 to 18,478 per year (73% increase), while the median number of days to respond to complex requests only increased at rate of 46% (307 days to 450 days). Also the number of FOIA requests processed each year went from 5,974 in 2009 to 15,304 in 2012 -- a 150% increase.
- The review of Keystone and other high profile FOIA requests was no different than any other FOIA review. Appropriate, senior level Department personnel were engaged or apprised when documents might be released under FOIA. Irrespective of who handles or is made aware of the request, the Department follows the FOIA law, and only omits materials that are statutorily excluded under the Act for national security and other reasons.

EMAIL

Attachments:

1. Q&A released by Secretary Clinton's office on March 10th after her press conference

10/18/2016

2. Secretary Powell on "This Week" stating he also used a personal account while Secretary, and did not provide the Department with printed copies of those email when he left nor does he still retain those emails to provide copies now. (LINK)

"I don't have any to turn over. I did not keep a cache of them. I did not print them off. I do not have thousands of pages somewhere in my personal files," Powell said. "A lot of the emails that came out of my personal account went into the State Department system. They were addressed to State Department employees and state.gov domain, but I don't know if the servers in the State Department captured those or not. "

"When I entered the State Department I found an antiquated system that had to be modernized and modernized quickly," he said. "I started using [email] in order to get everybody to use it, so we could be a 21st-century institution and not a 19th-century [one]. But I retained none of those emails, and we are working with the State Department to see if there's anything else they want to discuss with me about those emails."

Points

- Like Secretaries before her, Secretary Clinton used her own email account for work related email. She opted to use her own account solely as a matter of convenience.
- When she and other former Secretaries were asked by the Department to provide copies of their work related email to assist the Department in meeting its requirements under the Federal Records Act, she was the first and only former Secretary to do so -- providing the Department with over 30,000 work or potentially work related emails.
- While the Department is now working to better its own policies, she followed the practices in place at the time -- the same practices followed by her predecessors.
- Since November, Secretary Clinton has made clear that she will voluntarily testify before the Benghazi Select Committee on the tragic events of September 2012, and to continue to answer any questions at that time the Committee may have regarding her email use.

Special Government Employees (SGE's)

Attachments:

1. Letter from the Department to Senator Grassley in July 2013, including letter from Huma Abedin to the Department in response to Senator Grassley's questions.
2. List of SGE's at the Department dating back to Secretary Rice provided by the Department to Propublica.
3. Lists of SGE's at other executive branch agencies who provided data to Propublica (LINK)

Points:

- As the Department states in its letter to Senator Grassley, the U.S. government utilizes SGEs across the government to provide services and expertise that executive agencies require, recognizing that such employees may serve other clients or entities.
- SGE's are appointed throughout executive agencies for a variety of purposes, including to serve on federal advisory committees, provide outside expertise not available in the agency for specific projects, and as a means for agencies to retain expertise of former employees to provide continuing advice and guidance on matters, as needed, after they depart.
- The appointment of SGE's was not unique to Secretary Clinton or the State Department. SGE's were appointed under Secretary Rice during the Bush Administration and at many other executive branch agencies.

This version reflects our conversation yesterday and a big thanks to Mandy for sending additional suggestions on how to beef up the policy section.

One thing to keep in mind as you read is that it would be great to find places to cut.

Important Information

- Tickets are non-transferrable.
- Changes to your itinerary may affect your fare.
- Refund and exchange restrictions and penalties for failure to cancel unwanted travel may apply. If your travel plans change, call us before departure to change your reservation. If you do not board your train, your entire reservation from that point will be canceled. If you board a different train without notifying us, you will have to pay for it separately; the conductor cannot apply the money paid for your prior reservation. For all travel on or after March 1, 2014, for most Acela Express Business class reservations and Reserved Coach class reservations, you must cancel your reservation at least 24 hours prior to the train's departure in order to be eligible for a full refund. If the reservation is canceled within 24 hours of departure, a refund fee will apply. If the reservation is not canceled prior to scheduled departure ("no show"), the entire amount paid for the reservation will be forfeited. See the refund/exchange policy at Amtrak.com/refund.

- Summary of Conditions of Contract: Ticket valid for carriage or refund (subject to the refund rules of the fare purchased) for twelve months after date of issue unless otherwise specified. Amtrak tickets may only be sold or issued by Amtrak or an authorized travel agent/tour operator. Tickets sold or issued by an unauthorized third party will be voided by Amtrak. This ticket is a contract of carriage between Amtrak and the ticket holder, which is subject to specific terms and conditions, which are available for inspection at Amtrak ticket counters, on the Amtrak website at Amtrak.com/conditionsofcontract, or by calling 1-800-USA-RAIL. Tickets sold for non-Amtrak service are subject to the tariffs of the providing carrier.
- Questions? Contact us online at Amtrak.com/contact or call 1-800-USA-RAIL (1-800-872-7245) or TDD/TTY (1-800-523-6590).

Thanks Susan. Helpful and sorry I missed the first time around. Also sorry we missed on this trip. Glad I had time to catch up with Herb and Jim. Your Dad's health seems crappy but stable . I worry about him. Marlon Marshall our Deputy Campaign manager and director of states is in SF this week and I suggested he might try to catch up with you and Steve. Thanks for all you are doing.

Subject: Organizations that can help with turnout
To: John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com>

Hi John,

I am providing some info here on organizations that can help with turnout in specific places.

The info in this e-mail focuses on the organizations that I could identify most quickly where there has been some level of vetting.

If none of these are a match for some of the places you are focusing on just let me know about specific places and/or demographic groups and I would be happy to round up more info. I just wanted to get you something quickly, but there is more out there.

PowerPAC List

I am attaching a list of organizations that have been vetted by PowerPAC. You may remember meeting with Andy Wong about a year ago. Andy is a very talented and strong campaign strategist who has deep experience assessing the capacity of local groups, providing technical assistance, coordination, etc. So if he says a group can deliver, I have some level of confidence. He is also working closely with Marvin Randolph who is equally strong and talented with a focus specifically on registration and turnout in African American communities.

Large Latino and Immigrant Voter Effort

In addition to the PowerPAC group, there is a large, coordinated effort targeting Latino and immigrant voters in CO, NV, and FL.

There is a small coalition of national groups coordinating this, with the field being led by Center for Community Change Action. When we met about a year ago, you mentioned that the Center for Community Change is known for other things more than electoral work. A number of people have been vetting this project and kicking the tires. They have a strong field director and have departed from the usual format of such efforts. There is going to be much more standardization and centralization of the field work than is usually the case when multiple organizations work together. Even though a number of organizations are participating in each state, the staff working on voter registration and turnout will have centralized supervision and metrics. I feel there is some level of decent vetting that has happened here.

Let me know if you you are interested in contact info either at the national level or the state level, or specific organizations in each state.

Hope this is helpful!

Subject: Baker

Following up on our conversation the other day--I was thinking more about what role Charlie Baker (or perhaps someone like him) could play....I feel strongly that we want technocrat-types driving the technical work (which I even felt behind on when I did Terry last year), BUT I think Charlie in particular brings real value in the political space. And perhaps he's someone that she personally has confidence in? I was thinking about two possible roles:

1. Perhaps get him over at the DNC with the General Election Director. The GED (or whatever her/his title will be) should be driving general election data, analytics, polling, voter protection, and negotiating with state parties. Someone like Charlie could perhaps assist with interfacing with the Chair and keeping an eye on the finances. Someone who knows that building and has her trust.
2. He could also potentially help manage some of the incoming from her wider orbit on the campaign side--either helping to facilitate the kitchen cabinet, both taking input but also getting them to work on projects that feed into the campaign strategy.

Just some thoughts...

Robby

Subject: Gessler's not getting away with it--keep the pressure on

 ProgressNow Colorado C4 Logo

Dear Neighbor,

Has Scott Gessler finally gone too far?

In an unexpected development late yesterday, the two minority members of the congressional Elections Subcommittee have requested a federal investigation by the U.S. Department of Justice into the actions of Colorado Secretary of State Scott Gessler to prevent the mailing of ballots to all registered voters in Denver.

The pressure is building: if you haven't already, please sign our petition demanding that Gessler back away from his threats against the rights of tens of thousands of Colorado voters.

According to The Denver Post, Rep. Charles Gonzalez of Texas and Rep. Robert Brady of Pennsylvania have noticed a "disturbing pattern" of incidents, raising concerns about voting rights in Colorado under Gessler's watch—culminating in his lawsuit to prevent the mailing of ballots to tens of thousands of legally registered voters in Denver. [\[1\]](#)

 Scott Gessler vote suppression

"Given the diversity of the state of Colorado, and particularly that of Denver County, there is a high likelihood that the barrier to voting Secretary Gessler seeks to impose on these eligible citizens and registered voters will have such a discriminatory result in violation of the Voting Rights Act," the letter states.

Gessler's irresponsible and reckless move to suppress the vote in Denver, coming after so many other lapses in judgment and partisan games from Gessler in his short time in office, is on the verge of becoming a nationwide scandal. Thanks in part to thousands of ProgressNow Colorado members who have already spoken out against Gessler's vote suppression, he may not get away with this one! If you haven't already, please take a moment to sign our petition demanding that Gessler immediately stop his attempt to deny tens of thousands of legally registered voters in Denver ballots.

We will deliver your signatures and comments to Gessler's office, the press, and other elected officials no later than Friday. If you've already signed the petition, please forward this email to anyone you know who would be interested.

I can tell you it's very heartening to see the massive response against Gessler on this issue. It's still a bit of a shock to see a Secretary of State trying to prevent people from voting, but working together, we are going to stop him from succeeding. Thank you for doing your part.

Sincerely,

Alan Franklin

Four Good Reasons for Community Microgrids

By Elisa Wood on Jul 02, 2015 06:54 am

Polling shows that Americans are worried about energy, particularly its cost and availability. Recent storms exasperate their concerns. Meanwhile, cities face major infrastructure and economic development challenges. Here's how community microgrids can help.

Subject: Per your request
Dear John,

You asked that I prepare a series of items needed from the current administration immediately before and after November 4. The following outlines what we believe to be the most important needs.

Requests to be made as soon as possible:

- 1) Request the use of military aircraft to transport the President-elect during the entire time of the transition period on a non-reimbursable basis.
- 2) Request assistance with finding temporary SCIF in Chicago. GSA is having a hard time finding a temporary SCIF in Chicago because they can't say who it would be used by (having to fly under the radar in chi). We would like assistance in identifying a contact either with FBI or CIA in Chicago for GSA or us to talk about using a location on a temporary basis until our office is up and running.
- 3) Request WHCA support services be made available on an as needed basis immediately following election.

Requests for immediately after November 4:

- 1) Request (selective) use of White House Transportation Agency resources for the incoming Chief of Staff and National Security Advisor;
- 2) Photographic services from the White House Photo Office for purposes of an official photo of the President-elect and Vice President-elect;
- 3) Medical care and support for the President-elect and Vice President-elect from military personnel stationed at the White House medical unit (we believe this is already done, so just need confirmation);
- 4) Valet services for the President-elect from White House Mess personnel;
- 5) Request use of Blair House by the President-elect and members of his immediate family beginning January 2, 2009 through noon on Inauguration Day.
- 6) Request to have office space made available in EEOB for one Management/Ops head and 1-2 assistants to help ensure smooth process will be in place for January 20 intake of personnel.

John, by way of background, the then-incoming Bush Administration officially requested the use of military aircraft and use of Blair House starting January 5, 2001. Aircraft use was granted just before inauguration day, but I cannot find where we actually granted use of Blair at all. Blair House, if I remember correctly, is actually controlled by State and I think they had issue with providing it, but I may be wrong.

I added #6 because I was reminded that Bush Administration sought, and we provided, office space for Hector to use along with one-two assistants right after the New Year. They were the only people we allowed to have office space prior to noon on Jan. 20.

Let me know if you need anything else.

Another GOP TV rate request - this time an urgent request for a GOP Issue group to run 4/7-4/12 in NH, SC, IA, and NV.

Rumor is that this could be a SuperPAC for a candidate, potentially for Rubio. But not as confident in that rumor as other agency/candidate links.

Cheryl, I don't know if this does enough to make it feel less wishy washy or not, but revised below with a more direct statement of support up front and a few other tweaks. And happy to keep revising as well...

I support the President's executive action, in keeping with his responsibilities and well-established legal precedent, to focus finite resources on deporting felons rather than families. No one thinks that these new steps are the ideal solution, or that they will solve all of the fundamental problems in our immigration system. But there is also broad consensus that the status quo is untenable. For years the House of Representatives has abdicated its responsibility to take on this challenge, not only refusing to act on the bipartisan Senate legislation but also failing to advance any viable alternatives. Some will say he went too far, others, not far enough, but given this vacuum of leadership, President Obama had no better option. Only Congress can finish this job, and in the days ahead we should look to our elected representatives to take up that responsibility and pass a long-term bipartisan solution.

I hope the President's announcement will mark the beginning of a serious and substantive national debate about the way forward. Because there's so much more to do if we're going to really fix our broken immigration system - if we're going to keep families together, treat everyone with dignity and compassion, uphold the rule of law, protect our national security, and respect our heritage and history. Bringing millions of hard-working people out of the shadows and into the formal economy, so they can hold their heads high, pay taxes, and contribute to our shared prosperity, is one of the most effective steps we could take to accelerate our economic recovery and raise wages across the board for hard-working Americans. It would also reflect the best values of an open and inclusive nation.

As we move forward, let's remember that people of good will and good faith will continue to view this issue differently. Our arguments may grow heated at times, but if we proceed in a spirit of respect and shared purpose, I am confident that we can yet find our way toward common ground. Through it all, I hope we never lose sight of the fact that we're not talking about abstract statistics – we're talking about real families with real experiences. We're talking about children coming home from school to an empty house, their moms and dads whisked away without notice or explanation. We're talking about parents lying awake at night afraid of the knock on the door that could upend their lives and tear their families apart. We're talking about the fate of people who love this country, work hard, and want nothing more than a chance to contribute to the community and build a better life for themselves and their families. That's what this debate is about and why inaction is not an option.

Sorry. I will try to be constructive in the am but this reads and feels like what folks would expect from her who are not a fan or who believe she is running - a calculated effort to have it all in a statement with something for everyone.

I would opt for a shorter, simpler formulation - which I know is near impossible or that is what we would be reading from you. I worry though that this in form and in substance will remind folks what they don't like about politicians and her.

The heart of it is:

- 1) does she support the action the President is taking and would she have taken it?
- 2) And given the action, what is the path forward she sees for the country?

Below is what I think she should say about the President's executive action, either in statement form or on camera. It's long, but this is not a simple issue and we have a lot of interests and constituencies to consider. I've tried here to express support for POTUS without getting bogged down in the details of what is sure to be an unpopular measure, seen as both too much and too little, and then pivot to the need for broader Congressional action (defined by a set of principles rather than by slavish attachment to the DOA Senate bill). I also went back to our 2013 statement on gay marriage and reprised the theme of urging respectful, substantive debate and recognizing that a lot of people aren't going to agree with us on this. Finally, I tried to root the issue in the lived experiences of actual families, to make this a debate about human beings rather than legal precedents.

I know she's eager to take a look, so it would be great to hear quick reactions.

Thanks

Dan

President Obama is making the best of a bad situation. No one thinks that these new steps are the ideal solution, or that they will solve the fundamental problems in our immigration system. But there is also broad consensus that the status quo is untenable. For years the House of Representatives has abdicated its responsibility to take on this challenge, not only refusing to act on the bipartisan Senate legislation but also failing to advance any viable alternatives. Given this vacuum of leadership, President Obama had no choice but to follow well-established precedent and use his executive authority to begin making common-sense improvements and focus finite enforcement resources on deporting felons rather than families.

I hope the President's announcement will mark the beginning of a serious and substantive national debate about the way forward. Because there's so much more to do if we're going to really fix our broken immigration system – if we're going to keep families together, treat everyone with dignity and compassion, uphold the rule of law, protect our national security, and respect our heritage and history. URGENT: Koch-Backed Republicans jam through Obamacare Repeal in the House

John --

President Obama's landmark healthcare law is in serious jeopardy.

What's going on?

On Friday, House Republicans passed a bill that would GUT Obamacare and leave millions of Americans without access to affordable healthcare.

How is this different than previous attempts to dismantle Obamacare?

Republicans are using a little-known procedure called "reconciliation" to jam their bill through Congress.¹ That means they can pass this legislation without any Democratic backing.

For the first time in his Presidency, Barack Obama could be forced to sign or veto a bill gutting Obamacare.

Why are Republicans trying to repeal Obamacare?

Destroying Obamacare was a key part of the Koch Brothers' agenda when they spent hundreds of millions of dollars to elect Republicans last year.

So it's no surprise the Republican Majority is using this chance to dismantle the President's landmark achievement.

This is an all-hands-on-deck moment.

We're trying to reach 100,000 signers standing strong with President Obama before Republicans in the Senate hold a vote to repeal Obamacare. John, we need you with us.

Hillary Clinton Statement on Vice President Biden

“Joe Biden is a good man and a great Vice President. Serving alongside him in the Senate and then the administration, I saw first-hand his passion for our country and our people. Like millions of others, I admire his devotion to family, his grace in grief, his grit and determination on behalf of the middle class, and his unyielding faith in America’s promise. As Vice President, Joe has been by President Obama’s side for every pivotal decision. He helped save the auto industry and pull our economy back from the brink of depression. He continues to fight for higher wages, safer communities, and a more peaceful world. It’s a record to be proud of, defend, and build on. And I am confident that history isn’t finished with Joe Biden. As he said today, there is more work to do. And if I know Joe, he will always be on the front-lines, always fighting for all of us.”

I explored with Marc what the limitations would be on HFA's use of Governor Granholm if she were paid by Correct the Record.

As a threshold matter we could not call her a spokesman for the campaign or schedule her directly. We would be able to refer groups or media to her if they are looking for a non-campaign, third part surrogate, the same way we might refer them to the DNC Chair or Stephanie Schriock. For example this weekend she spoke at the Ohio State Party dinner. If she were at Correct the Record we could at least make sure her speaking and media opportunities met our needs/requests. Finally, as a person paid by CTR she could not solicit donations for the campaign.

She could be at CTR for a period and move to some other vehicle (New York - or Michigan- state party, DNC, HFA) at any point (i.e. there is no waiting period).

John,

I hear that the VP is doing an event w/ PM Modi; I am now doing the kind of embarrassing thing of checking in on an invite for myself. There are not many Indian Americans running DC organizations; we hosted Kerry at CAP before his India trip and we've launched this India 2020 program so it would be a tad embarrassing to not get an invite. But you never know so I'm checking in.

Can you let me know what I should do here? I hate to put you in any kind of awkward spot, so just let me know.

Thanks!

Neera

it went well - a clear hunger from folks for materials to get out there and support her/speak to her record. Folks were a bit quieter than we expected but got several notes from folks after the call indicating that people felt it went very well. We're going to follow up with everyone next week with messaging materials that they can begin to deploy, and will be keeping them apprised of our messages and opportunities on an ongoing basis. So glad you were able to join - really helped underscore the importance of everyone pitching in.

We're also working on arrangements for the dinner that Albright is going to host on Oct 9, and are moving forward on the former flag officer recruitment effort as well.

Hi guys

I wanted to share with you the total number of shifts confirmed today from labor for GOTC and Caucus Day. The majority of these shifts are over Saturday and Sunday. Labor has signed up and we are tracking locations for 1,854 shifts across the state of Iowa this weekend. I estimate that 1,854 shift is 55,620 door knocks this weekend from labor. This is a huge number and does not include the member to member canvasses and phoning they are doing on behalf of the campaign.

We are supported by Presidents Mary Kay Henry, Terry O'Sullivan, Randi Weingarten and Lee Saunders just this weekend. Other Presidents having coming in earlier, UBC, Ironworkers, AFGE, NTEU.

Big totals for shifts this weekend:

AFSCME 421

ISEA 324

SEIU 220

Other unions walking UA, UBC, LIUNA, Insulators, OPCMIA and BAC.

Said no. She was terribly flattered, etc., but she's one year into a 5-year commitment as dean at Univ of Michigan, just moved her family back from DC to Michigan and regrets that this is the wrong time to take on something like this.

I didn't let her say no during the first call, but after consulting with her husband and thinking about it, she called back. She, of course, would like to be helpful from where she is, etc.

John, I don't how you want to go back to him on things like this. I don't think there is another candidate of color who folks would be comfortable putting up as Chair, though either Ceci or Peter (as a stretch) could be a Member.

Subject: Communcations leadership structure

Madame Secretary, John,

I did some further thinking about what roles would make sense for Jen and Kristina. Interestingly, I think Huma is a determing factor in deciding how to proceed. Here's why:

I think it makes a lot of sense to have Jen be a Deputy who oversees Communications, Research, and Scheduling. Those three functions are highly complementary and integrated. In this scenario, I would have three people report to Jen: a Communications Director (Kristina), a Research Director and the Scheduling Director. This structure has a number of advantages: it potentially allows us to recruit a stronger Research Director, since researchers will like being on par with the Communications Director. It will also help to tightly integrate the schedule with the communications strategy, which is really good. It also provides me with a partner at the top of the organization to help handle incoming, which I like.

On the other hand, if we have Huma in the Vice Chair role we discussed--which I think would be really good, too--I would have the Scheduling Director report to her instead of Jen. In this scenario, I would have Jen be the Communications Director and Kristina be her deputy, since I don't think it makes sense to have a Deputy who only oversees only Communications and Research--at that point, you're just adding a layer. As Communications Director, Jen could focus on coordination with digital, strategic direction of reserach, oversight of surrogates and allied groups, participation in the senior strategy team, and guidance on the overall plan. Kristina could focus on detailed planning and implementation with the press secretaries, as well as your media training. I think it's easy to have a clear division of labor which plays to their respective strengths and experience.

Either structure could suceed. The big quesiton in my view is whether Huma will be in headquarters enough to actively manage staff (including the Scheduling Dir) or whether she will be out on the road so much that management is unrealistic. As we discussed, I'm comfortable with Huma being out on the road a lot early in the Vice Chair role to help train the new staff and make sure you have systems that fully support you, but we'd need to be working towards having her in HQ more. Perhaps having Kiki on the road would help make this possible? We should probably discuss this more on the phone--let me know if you'd like to do that.

On other fronts, I have some interesting COO candidate interviews early this week. Stay tuned!

Some small suggestions:

On state dept program that helped woman get a phone – can we scrap the “I was proud....” Language. Let’s let what she did speak for itself without the pat on her own back.

On your concern on this: America’s greatness is not a birthright. It can’t be inherited. It has to be earned. ADD It has to be earned my generation and your generation just like it was earned by our mothers, fathers and grandparents’ generation.

[DBSI]

AND ON THE FOLLOWING – I WOULD STRIVE FOR A LITTL STRONGER CALL TO ACTION TO THOSE IN THE ROOM.

And IT IS THE RESPONSIBILITY OF EACH AND EVERY ONE OF YOU TO LEAD THE WAY. YOU OWE IT TO YOURSELVES TO LEAD THE WAY AND YOU OWE IT TO THE NEXT GENERATION TO PAVE THE ROAD FOR THEM. YOU ARE SITTING HERE TODAY IN THIS ROOM FULL OF brilliant, fearless women. YOU GIVE EACH OTHER HOPE. You give me so much hope. And we have to stand up not just for ourselves, not just for women, but for everyone. For our families, our communities, our country.

Towards the end:

There are so many reasons to be hopeful. BUT there are so many MORE reasons to step up and be part of the solution.

Turkey's Presidential Elections 2014 – What do they mean for Turkey's democratization process, the Kurdish question and Turkey's foreign policy?

Turkey's Presidential elections in August 2014 offer an opportunity to evaluate the country's progress under the rule of Mr. Erdogan for the past 12 years and to discuss Turkey's political, economic and social transformations. One of the top priorities on Turkey's political agenda is the Kurdish question and the peace effort with the PKK. Where does it stand today and how will it be impacted by recent domestic political developments in Turkey? As part of the discussion, speakers will also address the potential restructuring of the relationship between the new president and the parliament as well as the possibility of a new constitution and judicial reform. Finally, the panelists will take a look at Turkey's foreign policy and its critical role in transforming regional conflicts.

Gen. Eaton Comments on Obama's Afghanistan Decision

Washington, D.C. - Today, Gen. Paul Eaton (Ret.), the National Security Network's Senior Adviser, released the following statement examining President Obama's impending speech on Afghanistan:

"President Obama's address tonight from the most storied of military academies, West Point, will serve as the culmination of a deliberative and crucial process: developing a comprehensive strategy for Afghanistan, something the Bush administration failed to do for nearly eight years. As opposed to that Administration's Iraq surge strategy--which was forged by a small group of retired generals and think-tank pundits over the course of four months--President Obama sought the counsel of generals on active duty and a wide ranging group of civilian leaders. Illustrating how the military in a democratic society has a vital role but not the last word, the Obama administration took General McChrystal's plan, war-gamed it, red-teamed it, challenged it, and only then, got the Commander in Chief to sign it. In so doing, I expect we will see the full power of the United States--diplomatic, economic and military--brought to bear on our foreign policy challenge in Afghanistan.

"For conservatives and the media, there has been a fixation on how many troops Obama will send to Afghanistan, citing Iraq as a guidepost. That surge indeed yielded results, but for reasons far beyond just the influx of more troops. Iran became convinced that the United States was not exhausted, the Sunni Sheiks got on board with US forces as the better option and the al-Maliki government backed away from the abyss of ethnic warfare. Finally--and importantly--US forces were deployed away from the huge forward operating bases into small units in order to turn greater responsibility over to local Iraqi security forces.

"The actual number of US forces in the surge was far less important than the message the combat power increase transmitted.

"And this is a lesson I hope President Obama will impart to the nation tonight: the troop numbers are all very interesting, but it is the message and strategy that will resonate most.

"This speech will add discipline and a strategic objective to an eight year old project that had none. A description of an end-game to our direct military involvement in the region is essential. Without one, continued drift is the only outcome."

Subject: NH HRC Closing Message

John

As you know, President Clinton was in NH yesterday. As expected, he was terrific and the reception was overwhelming. I took the opportunity to wait until the rope line was empty to privately ask him a question--was he aware of the campaign's closing argument? He wasn't and asked if I was. Obviously, I'm not but that's understandable. However, I have some thoughts and through you want to get my two-cents in.

My sense is we are two weeks ahead of where we were before the '92 campaign. At this point in '92 the campaign's goal was still making the case that Bill was qualified to be president. To Hillary and the campaign's credit, Hillary has passed that test and seen as "presidential". Contributing to that image has been to eschew (love that word) getting into mundane political squabbles that bore the voters and are singularly unhelpful in convincing undecided voters. The campaign's discipline has been praise worthy. That brings us to the point of the closing theme/message/argument.

While my first thoughts centered around a specific use of the word "leadership" (and that remains in my mind a continuing possibility) what comes to mind is who are we trying to win over at that point--post Iowa thru Primary Day--a combination of those who are 'undecided' and motivate our own supporters. The theme/message/argument should be directly about them rather than us! While the airwaves are back-to-back negative, we should be positive.

An example of the same would be "A Better Tomorrow". We don't have to shout. She will have already established the needed creditability. She will have already explained what she believes and stands for. We are not going to get the haters but we can comfortably associate ourselves with those who--while frustrated and disappointed--very much want to believe their future can and will be improved when she is President. I'm a believer and so are you!

Hi John -

I read an article yesterday in the Sun on the NAACP's activities for this year, in relation to their last brush with the IRS, and it got me thinking about our book particularly the Obama-McCain discussions in the prologue and epilogue.

While the prologue seems okay, the epilogue states, "Nonetheless, John McCain's election would be a catastrophe for the United States," based on his conservative positions on taxes, the war, health care, etc. Later in the epilogue, we state, "Barack Obama understands the urgency of breaking sharply and immediately with the Bush administration's conservative path..."

We can defend these statements easily based on the ideological content of the book. These are analytical statements and the book is not something distributed by the Center - people have to buy it.

But the given the level of exposure you and the institution will face this year, I thought it should be flagged regardless. It is not outside the realm of possibility that some opponent of ours might raise a stink about this. That might be a good thing, who knows.

Although not a Center project, the book jacket cites your affiliation with CAP and the copyright (negotiated long ago) is "Center for American Progress."

Perhaps I'm analyzing this a bit too much. Just wanted to make sure this was on your radar and didn't come as a surprise.

Take care - John

Hello Mr. Podesta,

I hope you are well. I am writing you to arrange a meeting between Hip Hop icon and visionary Q-Tip and Democratic presidential frontrunner Hillary Clinton. He would like to meet with her to discuss ways he can be used as bridge to the Hip Hop generation during the 2016 presidential campaign.

Q-Tip who is an ambassador member of Harry Belafonte's Sankofa.org has long been highly committed to issues of social justice. Q-Tip is devoted to amplifying the voices of the disenfranchised in an effort to promote justice, peace and equal rights for all. He is a big supporter of the work Mrs. Clinton has done throughout her career and has also worked alongside former president Bill Clinton at a 2003 DNC fundraiser. He even served as DJ for Chelsea Clinton's 25th birthday party in 2005. He's had a lasting track record with the Clinton's throughout the years. In fact, he had hoped to see Mrs. Clinton at his close friend Tory Burch's fundraiser tomorrow in The Hamptons. However, due to a prior commitment in Los Angeles, he will be not be able to make it.

Q-Tip would love to have short one-on-one with Mrs. Clinton as soon as her schedule permits. He will return to New York City on Monday.

Please let me know what can be arranged at your earliest convenience. Q-Tip is passionate about helping Mrs. Clinton secure a victory in this presidential race. Thank you in advance for your time.

All the best,

Betsy Jones

Tony seems to be in a lot of pain.
A bit hard to deal with, and uncommunicative..big surprise
He should not have left the hospital yesterday in my opinion.
I plan to call either the doctor or nurse to discuss next few days..
I think having someone look in on him, nurses aid etc. might be a good idea, and certainly while i am out of town.
Though maybe he will improve dramatically...
He will likely listen to any of this if it comes from you
He drank wine last night, though it is contraindicated with the meds he is taking.

Below were Wendy's thoughts on the polling list memo Robby prepared.

In particularly in asking her how she would do branding, I asked if she could ride any polling that was done by team - she asked the nature of that polling before she could opine and I shared his polling list memo ($2.1M) one.

Cheryl,

I wanted to give you immediate reaction to the polling and research materials you sent yesterday.

At a high-level, I believe the plan that Robby has outlined is robust and appropriate to an ongoing polling approach. Additionally, I believe it can have utility from a brand positioning and tracking perspective. I see the quantitative polling piece as an ongoing tracker that will allow us to understand results on key imagery metrics that will inform ongoing work.

That said, there are particular aspects I have questions around.

1. While I believe in the mix of online and telephone surveying, I question how representative the home phone population are to our necessary target reach. Additionally, we should think hard about polling calls to mobile phones, not sure how socially acceptable that is. As a point of reference, Coke's continuous tracking survey fielded 365 days a year is all handled online. As a point of input I have asked a friend at AT&T for home phone penetration and attrition numbers so we can better consider.
2. I think the ongoing online discussion boards are a great idea. I have this in place and use it often with a firm called Communispace -- I had mentioned this when we spoke. I'd be interested in understanding the recommended firm for this and having a dialog around the methodology.
3. For the qualitative groups, I would really like to engage/lead these, the methodology, the desired outcomes, the firm that would lead, etc. These will be material to brand positioning and there's a great opportunity to not duplicate efforts.
4. I'd also seek involvement in the engagement of an analytics firm. The materials indicate Blue Labs. I'm familiar with Bluefin Labs which is an exceptional analytics firm. Not sure if this is the same. More broadly, among our analytics deliverables we should be able to tie the movement in key attributes/imagery to likelihood to vote. This is a key need of the analytics model which can then be tracked continuously through the polling.

5. I recognize that sub groupings will follow this initial push out. That said, understanding multicultural voters -- unacculturated, acculturated and bi-cultural Hispanics, African Americans and multicultural Millennials as a starting point -- will be important. Also other clusters are certain to materialize -- women/ Moms, community activists, youth/millennial, etc. We will want this understanding post exploratory to truly inform actions/content once a campaign is underway.
6. The media consultant at GMMB appears to be an earned media expert (vs paid). Would want to confirm this. I am familiar with GMMB with my work with the American Beverage Association, they've done a good job there. On paid media I would want to leverage a general market media firm.
7. On the handful of mentions RE branding and design (website, etc) I agree with the input -- eg branding's role. That said we'll want to lift the role of branding to overarch all decisions and outputs under the moniker of Everything Communicates. So being on-brand will be critical and a starting point for everything we do and execute.
8. On the production of any materials logo/mark, exploratory or announcement videos, website development and all associated content, I would want to lead these aspects. I believe the exploratory materials will be judged as the equivalent of announcement materials. They must set the tone, create momentum, be shareworthy... I could keep going. They're really important. $45k for videos is a bit tight in my mind, but again, we can be creative on this.
9. A final thought on research and measurement. As a basis we need to be asking all of these questions against "the ideal leader" and then in reference to our candidate. The qualitative learning on the ideal candidate and our candidate starting point informs the ongoing imagery that the polling would track which informs our messaging and content adjustments in realtime.
10. Ok, I lied, now a real final thought. One area of exploratory research we need is to understand the role and importance of a movement. Change was a movement and BO became the leader of that movement. On our discovery we need to probe for this in terms of what the ideal candidate represents and the learnings around voters mood, desires, actions wanted, etc. and then spend time thinking about the packaging of the position and whether it can/should be a movement. Movements are important and welcomed by Millennials particularly. There is something for us to truly understand and potentially leverage in a big way, IF the data supports. This also helps to deflect the negativity toward her versus the movement. It's an interesting strategy but again has to be authentically true of her/her agenda.
- I really look forward to engaging directly with Robby. I believe we are complementary in talent set and can create a win/win approach (and outcome) together. I like/support his thinking in these documents.

I owe you email 2 on the communication/cadence for me here that I know will inform the timing of my meeting with Robby.

Working on that shortly.

Thanks. Wendy

It's the final weekend before the election and I wanted to pass along a series I wrote this week highlighting Signal Labs' realtime analytics capabilities and insights called Five Races, Five Days, Five Signal Facts as you prepare to report on or just observe the midterm election. We've come up with five unique facts about each race that you probably didn't know.

Through our unique ability to monitor traditional and social media, we can provide realtime data analytics, media monitoring, and business intelligence to our clients, which include political campaigns, top public relations firms, Fortune 500 companies, professional sports teams, and leading financial institutions.

As we get close to the finish line, we did a deep dive on five tight U.S. Senate races to offer a realtime picture of what's happening on the ground in the nation's political battlegrounds.

The races are Arkansas, Georgia, Iowa, Kentucky and North Carolina. We believe these behind-the-scenes examinations shed light on the campaigns that will shape the nation's political future.

6 radio interviews and 2 coffee shops this morning. Interviews were all live or taped Detroit stations with the exception of one we did into Flint. Quick hits, mostly centered around getting out to vote. Flint came up in every one, and then education, and ACA. No flags. Every single interviewer was for her. Highlight of the morning was one of the hosts, whose stage name is "Foolish" asked a question, to which HRC replied "Well, Foolish, that is far from a foolish question." Awkward chuckles all around.

We did 2 OTRs, both at very hip coffee shops a couple of miles outside of downtown Detroit.

The first was Avalon, not too far from the Shinola Store. HRC walked in and chatted with the baristas a little, then went to one of two small sitting areas and shook a lot of hands. She had several interesting conversations, one with a woman who has cystic fibrosis, and her friend who also has it had met and chatted with HRC in NH. We'll get the audio and have the exchanges transcribed.

Second OTR was at Astro coffee, near the old Detroit train station, which was pretty striking. HRC shook a lot of hands and ordered yet more coffee. Lots of people seemed to have voted, and lots said they'd voted for her.

Back at the hotel now, likely until we leave for Cleveland this evening.

On Mar 6, 2016, at 2:27 PM, Nick Merrill <nmerrill@hillaryclinton.com> wrote:

ICYMI, HRC did a 7 minute pre-taped hit on Face the Nation this morning. Dickerson began by asking if Senator Sanders should stay in the race until the end. She said that's for him to decide, she's proud to have more delegates and to have built a broad coalition that can win in November. He asked about enthusiasm on the Republican side. She said that she was proud to have gotten more votes than anyone in this race, and mentioned that she has more white support than anyone if you exclude Vermont. She got asked about Trump bring people into his coalition, she said she wanted everyone in hers. Asked about emails and played a little offense on the WaPo report this morning that made clear how many state officials, including career, we're sending what's now considered classified. Name-checked Powell and mentioned that he called this all absurd. Final question was about Libya, stemming from the NYT 2-parter last week. Handled it well.

Then we went to church. 3 to be exact.

We began at the Holy Ghost Cathedral, with about 400 congregants I'd guess. The Bishop gave a rousing introduction about how much she loves Hillary Clinton, because HRC is a woman who's been through difficult times and come out on the other side with the Glory of God.

HRC's remarks were powerful, she talked about the need for us to unite. That we need citizenship and stewardship in addition to leadership. Real togetherness message. She told the story of the prodigal son, and used it to talk to the congregation about the discipline of gratitude. She then did Flint, schools in Detroit, and then a litany on breaking down barriers. Ended by talking about the need to never grow weary doing good.

Next up was Russell Street Missionary Baptist Church

Pastor gave a nice intro, started by praising President Clinton, said "today she comes before us standing in her own shoes, with her own record, and her own vision." Mentioned Debra and other strong women from the bible.

HRC opened with love and kindness. Talked about Flint, ended by saying that we need to stand up for each other and our future.

Final church was Triumph Church. The sanctuary was a beautiful wooden dome with stained glass windows. She opened with barriers here, then praised Obama and the ACA. Talked about togetherness, and did Flint at the end.

Very good morning.

On a personal note, I just had two Coney Island hot dogs at the famous Lafayette Coney Island next to the hotel. I highly recommend. Bring your defibrillator, or ask to borrow one from USSS.

Jobs speech was great. She stuck to the script mostly, cut out a few things (didn't mention the /ideas webpage and cut out the story at the end). Only real add was a line at the end about "bad mouthing America" that some tried to seize on as a shot at Bernie, but it was (mostly) about the GOP.

The Harwood interview was a little less substantive than promised, but she did fine. Got clawbacks in there, and a lot of questions about her approach to the economy, but all in the context of Bernie, Trump, what's politically viable. She got emails as well, handled well.

Did an OTR at Kuzzo's Chicken and Waffles with the Mayor and Congresswoman Brenda Lawrence. Lots of enthusiasm, lots of selfies.

We did 4 radio interviews, into Jackson, MS, New Orleans x2, and Detroit. All very positive interviews, disproportionately about college affordability and education writ large.

More tomorrow.

On Mar 1, 2016, at 2:50 PM, Nick Merrill <nmerrill@hillaryclinton.com> wrote:

Two OTRs with Governor Mark Dayton complete.

Walked into Mapps Cafe in a trendy neighborhood near U of M, greeted by about 50 patrons and 25 press.

We are now officially no longer 88 days from a press avail, but 0. Merica, Karni, Abby Philipps, and some locals asked her questions. Merica asked her about expectations today, she said were working hard, hope people turn out. Asked about Sanders' path, she declined to comment, said she's going to keep going.

Local asked about message for Minnesota voters today. Talked about breaking down barriers.

Abby Philipps asked her about Trump being the eventual nominee. She dodged. Said they all have deeply troubling views.

of the WaPo asked about Trump, she said things like this need to be repudiated. She would continue speak out against bigotry.

Annie Karni asked her another expectations question (I think), she again have a pretty stock answer. She tried to ask about asking for Bernie to get out of the race, she said that everyone has to make their own decisions.

Local asked her about Trump, she talked about speaking out against insults.

She met a Somali woman who wanted to tel her she was going caucus for her through her daughter who was translation. HRC told her she would be the president for everyone.

She met another Somali American on the city council who she was impressed by.

HRC, Dayton, and the Lieutenant Governor made it to the counter ordered coffee (HRC got something called the Big Bang).

A guy came over to her at the counter and told her that he had just received a letter back from her yesterday. He had written HRC about a health problem (I think with his dad). They had a really nice exchange about how useful it was for her to hear stories like his so she can figure out how to help.

Her final real interaction before leaving was with a Somali-American girl, probably 26 or 27, who said that Somali-American youth are being marginalized and experiencing prejudice, and given her comments about the African American community, how do we know she'd be any different now? She mentioned super predator specifically. HRC said she'd used the word one time, and to look at her record. The young woman said she knew what her record was and that it was supportive of the African American community, which is why so many have supported her campaign. She mentioned the Somali-American councilman that she'd just seen, and that she'd met with members of the community last time she was in Minneapolis. The girl responded by saying something to the effect of the councilman doesn't count. HRC told her that if she believes that than maybe she should run for office. At this point the Governor intervened and the conversation ended.

Left the coffee shop for Global Market, and indoor market with food and other stands that sell various things. We got mobbed in the lobby so barely made it to the proper market everywhere. Took some selfies and then out.

Tom Joyner, Tom Joyner Morning Show

Roland Martin started off with a question about job growth for small businesses. Sharpton asked her about who she'd appoint as AG to protect voting rights, same with SCOTUS justices. Don Lemon, said she stopped talking about Sanders on the trail. She basically refuted that citing her rallies yesterday and proceeded to draw contrasts. Jacque Reid asked her about what can be done in communities. She talked a lot about breaking down barriers. Finally, Sybil Wilkes asked her about how her presidency would be different than her husbands.

DeDe, Host, Dede in the Morning (KKDA), Dallas, TX

Why is it important to get out and vote, Trump, asked about WJC in the WH. Last question was about Morgan Freeman voice HRC's ads.

Madd Hatta, Host, The Madd Hatta Morning Show (97.9), Houston, TX

"Mista Madd" opened by calling her Madam President, pretending it was a slip of the tongue.

Questions were college loans, talked about making America whole again. Final Q was about wages. And then the final final Q was about what she'd do about health care.

We just wrapped up some satellite TV hits into Atlanta, Oklahoma City, Denver, and Little Rock. She got or emails in all but Denver. She didn't go full-bore on her most recent trust answer, but talked about not being a natural politician, had a warm tone, all in all did well. Not really a flag unless Healy and Chozick are trolling for nonsense this morning, but should mention that she told the OK City anchor that WJC was her chief advisor. Executive summary: This was one of Hillary's best recent rallies. She looked incredibly comfortable on stage as she spoke about the differences between her and the Republican nominees, our country's economic success under her husband, voting rights, Supreme Court and more.

Reporters noticed Hillary speaking more freely about her husband, referring to him by his first name and to his time as president. Mentions of her time in Arkansas, investment in jobs and infrastructure and debt-free college got the most applause. She got a lot of nods when she said, "its not enough to create opportunities for my granddaughter, I want to create opportunities for everybody."

She gave a similar speech at each, sort of an abbreviated new stump, did togetherness, mothers of the movement, health care, love and kindness. First one was probably a little better organized, but crowd at each was fired up. Lots of applause and lots of individual cheers.

Left there and flew to Nashville, where we joined Tony Goldwyn and the Mayor Megan Barry for a coffee stop at Fido, near Vanderbilt. The place was packed, she ordered some coffee and took lots of photos, spoke to the owner and his son for awhile. On small thing to note: on the way in Tony asked her what she thought of Trump's David Duke comments this morning. She replied that it was "pathetic" under her breath, which has made a little news (in a good way).

The rally at Meharry Medical college was high-energy. Tony Goldwyn did LONG but solid intro. HRC visited an overflow room with about 400. 800 in the main room. She told the story again about the young, affluent white guy that emailed her after her Harlem speech and said he'd been arrested but through connections his parents made the charges go away. All people must be equal under the law.

We left and went to the Statehouse which was electric. Who knew there were that many Democrats in Georgia. She addressed the Democratic Caucus and did a short version of her stump that was pretty crisp. She used a line about spending 10 months crafting policies, and while the press may have thought that was boring, she's very proud of it. People loved it. There were no press in the room.

We took many a selfie while wading through throngs of people, with more pouring over the balconies, and headed to Octane coffee shop for an OTR. Usher was going to join us but got stuck in traffic...

Dan Merica asked her if she was jealous that she didn't get Christie's endorsement, to which she responded with a prolonged smile (you could see the gears turning), and then said "Dan, I really like you. I really really like you." They are basically courting each other at this point.

Started the day with an interview with Joe Madison, she called him on our way to SC Strong in North Charleston.

Opened with a PBS story on the wealth gap growing. She talked about her plans and inequality in general. Follow up was about Obama's hesitancy to have targeted efforts, instead focusing on the all boats rise with the tide notion, so she skipped the Obama piece and talked about Clyburn's 10-20-30 , her own plans.

Then he played Gwen Carr's comments last night, quoted some of her lines including the one about HRC seeking them out, and compared it to Kennedy going to see MLK when he was arrested in Alabama. HRC gave a strong answer about being humbled, being a mother and a grandmother.

Gitmo Q at the end, answer tracked with her statement yesterday.

SC Strong went well. She did some very brief opening remarks, had a couple of the round table participants share their stories, and then we shuffled the press out.

Dropped by the Longshoremen's, she thanked everyone and asked for their vote. Great reception, they were very grateful that she came to the hall.

On the way to the airport we called Rhonda Rawlings for her show.

Rhonda started with minimum wage. HRC stuck to her standard lines, mentioned equal pay, got a follow up on why $12 and defended it well.

College affordability. She said she think debt free public education is achievable. Covered student debt as well.

Breaking Down Barriers forum with the mothers in Greenville...talked about how amazing it was, then asked about policing. HRC talked about their ability to turn grief into action.

Ended with Obama's legacy.

Alpha Kappa Alpha event went well. She did some of her remarks, some ad libbing. She reprised her town hall Q from last night where she was asked about trust and forgiveness, repeated what she said about the importance of forgiveness and cited Mandela as our greatest example. Worked a rope line at the end for a fair amount of time.

Did two local affiliates before headed off to Sumter. CBS and NBC locals. Talked about the state of the race, why she's in SC, Gitmo, and a quick Q about emails and Benghazi in CBS. NBC asked her about SC, Trust, Trump, Bernie supporters and how to bring them around if she wins, and one interesting question about her unique ability to energize rooms with minorities in them.

We're in Sumter now at Moore College. She's been talking for 45 minutes. Covered it all! Possible impending Q&A...

Mothers of the Movement Event

Here's a summary, but for those of you that didn't watch...it was quite something.

She opened by acknowledging Herb Buhl, who she worked with when she was down here working for CDF in the 1960s. Told a funny story about not knowing how to drive a stick shift and him lending her a manual car.

She briefly told the stories of the mothers and the children they lost.

Guns are the leading cause of death among black men, more than the other leading 9 causes of death combined. There was an audible sigh in the audience.

Talked about Gabby Giffords, and the 9 year old girl shot along with the others that day.

No fly list.

Politics are hard, I know that. But sometimes the hard things are sometimes the things that are most important to do. President Obama wants to make guns a voting issue and I agree completely.

Please welcome these remarkable people who are taking this journey on behalf of all of us.

HRC turned it over to the guests.

Sabrina Fulton: "She walked in as a Presidential candidate, walked out as a compassionate mother."

No one took notes for her, she took notes for herself.

Maria Hamilton, mother of Dontre Hamilton, told her story.

Lucia McBath, mother of Jordan Davis.- told her story. I have watched her bring people and countries back into the fold back into the fray, and she has done a good thing.

Gwen Carr- Talked about all the outreach, how HRC came to them. Wondering what the catch was. "There was no catch, she was just genuinely concerned." I endorse her, because she endorsed us first.

Geneva Reed-Veal, Sandra Bland's mom. Did a wonderful rant on the media and how tired she was of them. Go out and vote. We have 9 months to put her in, she's the new baby."There are no secret emails."

Mark Kelly: X percent of children that die from gun violence in the developing world die in the US.

Gabby- Here to talk about Hillary Clinton, who is tough, she is courageous, she will fight to make our families safer. In the WH she will stand up to the gun lobby. Thanks why I'm voting for Hillary. Speaking is difficult for me but come January I want to say these two words...Madame President.

Standing ovation from the room, someone stood up and yelled "Madame President!" Everyone went nuts.

HRC said thanks to everyone, talked about their courage. I hope this is a movement that lasts, and ended to work a rope line.

At the very end, she briefly spoke to Alex Wagner on the rope line who was there with The Circus. I'm not sure it checked the box for us, but they talked briefly about how amazing the mothers were, what a moving event it was

- She reiterated her commitment to fight for CIR with a pathway to citizenship; protect and implement DACA and DAPA; and explore other ways to protect undocumented people via executive action ("create new categories").
- She stated support for UFW's legislative proposal to expand overtime pay for farm workers in CA, so overtime is av. after 40 hours/week or 8 hours/day.
- She was asked to help in the dispute between the UFW and CA-based Gerawan Farming. She said she's do everything possible. After the meeting, she had a private conversation with Arturo and expressed caution b/c of campaign.
- She was asked about healthcare for the undocumented community. Stated her support for all undocumented people to be able to buy in the exchange, but acknowledged that most people don't have the resources to afford it. She also said she would work to make the exchanges available to all, including subsidies, but immediately linked it to CIR. Also wants to work with states like CA and the UFW to explore other ways to provide HC
- Re Central American kids, she said government funded legal counsel for UCs and working with El Salvador, Guatemala, and Honduras to take down drug cartels and build the region.
- She was asked if she would appoint Obama to the SCOTUS. She said he would be a very good candidate, but she wouldn't have that power...and he probably wants a normal life. It was a fun exchange bet. her and the farm workers.

Two SC radio interviews today:

1) We did a repeat with Cynthia Hardy that ended up being a very brief conversation HRC joined in progress about health disparities in communities of color.

2) She did a slightly tougher but ultimately very strong interview with Judi Gatson of 103.1 KISS FM. She asked HRC about her recent comments on not being in this for herself, and said that some doubt that. The answer was very strong, and invoked a little reflection on sexism. She asked about youth, but the framing was interesting, which was that BdB and Eric Garner's mom endorse, but children of BdB and Eric Garner's sister do not. The other question most of note was Judi observing that she hears people in the community say that HRC embraces Obama only to pander to the AfAm population. Interesting that that broke through, (Stephanie if you talked to her I'd be curious to hear more about how often she's hearing that), HRC's answer was good, she said that Senator Sanders claiming that was offensive, that she nominated him at the convention, campaigned for him, worked for him for 4 years, and that it "affects" her "personally" to hear Sanders and his supporters say that stuff.

Finance event in Atherton was largely uneventful. She did take questions. She dinged Uber when talking about the Kalamazoo shooter, which thrilled many in the audience here in Silicon Valley, I'm sure. No encryption questions.

One more finance event and then we're off to LA to spend the night.

HRC had the press come in closer to listen and then dos brief remarks of her own on the importance of this issue for people like Vicki. Pretty great stuff.

Next we went to Youthbuild, an organization with a Nevada chapter that builds houses for Habitat for Humanity. We walked through a big warehouse where HRC individually met about 15 workers. She was intrigued by how most of them found the place, which was through Craigslist, and probed them on what they were learning and what they wanted to do next. Most wanted to continue in the building trades. She spoke briefly, and invited the Youthbuild and Habitat folks to speak as well.

Audience was diverse across the board, lots of millennials and lots of young people who work for various NGOs and advocacy groups with a lot of very good questions and passionate comments. At the end HRC commented on her life's work, figuring out how to make difference in people's lives as opposed to promising them the moon, and making sure lives are better when you're done than when you started. Wasn't too hot but poignant and noticeable following 45 minutes of discussing the importance of reading to your children every day.

South Carolina was quite something. Good crowd of about 450/500 at Denmark-Olar Elementary School (home of the Vikings). HRC stuck largely to her remarks and outlined her $125 billion plan to improve underserved communities, and took questions on just about everything: social security, health care multiple times, body cameras, Flint, homeless vets, Trump, student loans, who she's pick for VP, and a little girl who gave her a drawing that said on it: "I'm not bossy I have leadership skills." It was a very engaged, high-energy affair.

Following the town hall and a long ropeline, we did 2 TV stand ups and a print interview. Discussion in both revolved around race relations, the state of the race, and education, which HRC discussed at length in a dilapidated older locker room with paint people off the walls in the background.

Our print interviewer, Princess Williams, was really impressive. She won an award last year for best student journalist in a college under 5000 students from the South Carolina Press Association. She was nervous but did a great job, asked HRC about education, what we can't do beyond government programs to help level the playing field, attracting young voters, and what life is like off the campaign trail.

Dan O'Neil, former Dodd and O'Malley supporter but '92 Clinton supporter joined them for omelettes. Following breakfast, some more selfie-taking ensued as did a conversation with a couple of vets. Restaurant felt overwhelmingly supportive.

We went back to the hotel and taped 6 TV interviews with local and Boston affiliates. Lots about the state of the race here and the weather. Most asked about Warren which she handled well, a couple of transcripts questions and a good exchange with FOX on sexism in politics.

From there we went to Manchester Community College. Crowd of about 1100, she did a few things differently, including calling Bernie out for accepting DSCC money that came in part from Wall Street.

We taped Rachel Maddow after the event. It opened with the staffing question and then covered the waterfront...Flint, trust, attacks, transcripts. We let it go so Rachel would spend more time on the positive which she did.

Subject: Baker

Following up on our conversation the other day--I was thinking more about what role Charlie Baker (or perhaps someone like him) could play...I feel strongly that we want technocrat-types driving the technical work (which I even felt behind on when I did Terry last year), BUT I think Charlie in particular brings real value in the political space. And perhaps he's someone that she personally has confidence in? I was thinking about two possible roles:

1. Perhaps get him over at the DNC with the General Election Director. The GED (or whatever her/his title will be) should be driving general election data, analytics, polling, voter protection, and negotiating with state parties. Someone like Charlie could perhaps assist with interfacing with the Chair and keeping an eye on the finances. Someone who knows that building and has her trust.
2. He could also potentially help manage some of the incoming from her wider orbit on the campaign side--either helping to facilitate the kitchen cabinet, both taking input but also getting them to work on projects that feed into the campaign strategy.

Just some thoughts...

Robby

Another Congressional Career Apparently Blessed By Advocacy Of Our "Side-Of-The-Angels" Issues

WASHINGTON, DC, May 29, 2015 - Congressman Chris Van Hollen's bid to win the seat of retiring Maryland Senator Barbara Mikulski may enjoy the blessing bestowed on President Barack Obama, Vice President Joe Biden and Secretary of State Hillary Clinton as a result of their advocating our "side-of-the-angels" issues. In 2008, we invited four US Senators from among the 12 Presidential candidates to address our Coordinated Effort of Greek-Americans leadership. The four went on to become President, Vice President, Secretary of State and Republican presidential nominee. Either we hit the one in 495 likelihood of choosing the correct four out of the 12 candidates, or their advocacy for Greek-American issues blessed their electoral success.

Our Side-of-the-Angels Greek-American issues include:

- Pressing Turkey to allow religious freedom for the spiritual head of the second largest Christian Church in the world, Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew, located in Istanbul;
- Unearthing and returning to families the remains of four Americans and 1,300 Cypriots, most captured alive by the Turkish Army in 1974 and then executed and buried in mass graves. As well as the removal of the Turkish Army, currently occupying one third of our ally the Republic of Cyprus, and the return of control to the Cypriot people -- Greek-Cypriot and Turkish-Cypriot; and
- Support for Greece, our ally whose air and sea base in Souda Bay, Crete has been crucial to tens of thousands of Americans deployed to the Middle East, and one of only seven countries to stand with American forces in every 20th Century conflict.

Another beneficiary of our issues is Senator Mark Kirk (R-IL) who for many years we worked closely with in his previous capacity as the lead House staffer who handled our issues. He handled them for Congressman John Porter (R-IL), a member of the Foreign Operations Appropriations Subcommittee. Kirk was key to our being able to reduce American foreign aid to Turkey from $1 billion a year to zero because of their occupation of Cyprus.

Chris Van Hollen was Kirk's US Senate staff counterpart. He worked for Senator Claiborne Pell (D-RI), Chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. As the Chairman's top person on our issues, he played a significant role through some of our most difficult times. Chris was then elected to the US House of Representatives where he was consequently selected for his party's leadership. Now, he may join Kirk in the Senate.

Our Congressional advocates have enabled us to establish Greek-Americans as the only nationality, other than the Irish, to meet annually with each US President for 30 years; change the positions of France and Germany so that Cyprus could accede early to the EU; and begin some movement toward religious freedom for the Ecumenical Patriarchate. These advocates on Capitol Hill with whom we have worked so closely for years deserve all of the blessings that materialize.

As he launches the next phase of his political career, our national community will recognize Chris Van Hollen's unwavering track record and his close connection to our Greek-American issues. Van Hollen's wife, Katherine, is a Greek-American and their children were baptized in the Greek Orthodox Church.

Don't expect big bills to get through Congress in 2016

Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell walks to his office after leaving the Senate floor.
(Andrew Harrer/Bloomberg)

BY JAMES HOHMANN

THE BIG IDEA:

— Mitch McConnell is tamping down expectations for any breakthrough legislative accomplishments in the final year of Barack Obama's presidency. "I'd be surprised," the Senate Majority Leader said in an exclusive interview with The Post .

— The Republican also dealt a potentially fatal blow to the Trans-Pacific Partnership. He said the sweeping trade pact with 11 Pacific Rim nations would be defeated if sent to Congress next spring or summer, as the Obama administration plans to do. He told my colleague Paul Kane that the text should not be sent over for approval until the lame-duck session after November's elections — and maybe not until after Obama leaves office.

McConnell, who previously supported efforts to enhance Obama's trade negotiating powers, also signaled that he is personally undecided on how he would vote. "There's significant pushback all over the place," the leader said. "Yeah, I think it would be a big mistake to send it up before the election."

— McConnell is astute and has well-honed political instincts. While he has parochial concerns about the deal's impact on Bluegrass State businesses, he also sees the downside to forcing vulnerable incumbents in states like Illinois, Wisconsin and Pennsylvania to take a vote that will be hard to sell in a higher-turnout presidential year. And he's trying to lead a GOP conference in which four of 54 members are running for president, which complicates every single vote.

— McConnell's comments should serve as a reality-check antidote to optimism that has come out of the White House on issues like criminal justice reform and from Speaker Paul Ryan, who dreams of passing a bunch of big-ticket items to demonstrate that Republicans can govern. Read the full interview here .

THE LATEST ON THE FIGHT OVER GUNS:

— Knowing nothing will pass Congress, the White House is putting the finishing touches on an executive order to expand background checks on gun sales, senior adviser Valerie Jarrett announced at a vigil for victims of the Newtown shooting in Connecticut. “Please know that President Obama shares your pain and frustration, as well as your steadfast determination to keep pushing to make us all safer,” Jarrett said at the event, according to the Huffington Post. “That’s why the president has directed his team, in short order, to finalize a set of recommendations on what more the Administration can do on its own to save lives from gun violence.”

— House Republicans voted down a privileged resolution brought up by Nancy Pelosi to prevent people on the terrorist watch list from being able to buy firearms. Technically, the House voted 242-173 on a question of parliamentary procedure. But Democrats will HAMMER vulnerable GOP members for it anyway in attack ads next year.

— Taking matters into his own hands, Connecticut Gov. Dannel Malloy (D) will sign an executive order preventing anyone on the no-fly list from buying guns in his state. (Jerry Markon)

— A panel at the University of Texas at Austin said guns should be allowed in classrooms. (Sarah Larimer)

— An FBI spokesman said last night that investigators are searching a lake near the site of the San Bernardino attack after receiving a lead that the shooters had been in the area. Authorities continue to zero in on the neighbor who bought the guns: Enrique Marquez, who is cooperating and has been interviewed several times, was particularly close with the male shooter, Adam Goldman and Thomas Gibbons-Neff report. "Officials say they discussed some type of attack around 2012 but dropped the idea after four men were arrested in Riverside, Calif., in a separate plan to kill Americans in Afghanistan ... Another FBI official said it didn't seem like the two men had picked a target."

THE LATEST ON TRUMP:

FRESH TALK OF A BROKERED CONVENTION DURING A SECRET MEETING AT “THE SOURCE”: Twenty party bigwigs met at the Wolfgang Puck restaurant near the Capitol on Monday at the behest of RNC Chair Reince Priebus, Robert Costa and Tom Hamburger scoop . The hot topic was Trump and a possible floor fight next summer. Power-brokers fretted about the possibility of no one locking up the nomination by July 18. Attendees, including McConnell (who, along with Priebus, remained mostly silent for fear that anything he said might leak), agreed that “the party’s establishment must lay the groundwork for a floor fight in which the GOP’s mainstream wing could coalesce around an alternative,” per Bob and Tom. They discussed the contours of what a floor fight might look like, with delegates who are “bound” in the first round of balloting becoming free agents in a second, third or even more rounds. The last time the GOP had a contested convention was in 1976, when Ronald Reagan challenged sitting President Gerald Ford.

Spotted at the meeting: Ward Baker, executive director of the National Republican Senatorial Committee; Rob Simms, his counterpart at the National Republican Congressional Committee; Ron Kaufman, an RNC committeeman and Romney confidant; and pollster Linda DiVall. Whit Ayres, an adviser to Marco Rubio, and Vin Weber, an ally of Jeb Bush, also were there, among others.

CRUZ ADMITS TRUMP STRATEGY BEHIND CLOSED DOORS: The Texas senator, who has steadfastly avoided criticizing Trump in public, did so at a private fundraiser in New York on Wednesday. Cruz said Trump faces “challenging questions” about his “judgment” to be president, the New York Times reports . Before 70 people in a Madison Ave. conference room, Cruz said that while he likes Trump and Carson personally, neither will win and that “gravity will bring both of those campaigns down.” “You look at Paris, you look at San Bernardino, it’s given a seriousness to this race, that people are looking for: Who is prepared to be a commander in chief? Who understands the threats we face?” Cruz asked. “Who am I comfortable having their finger on the button? Now that’s a question of strength, but it’s also a question of judgment. And I think that is a question that is a challenging question for both of them.” He also said he is “thrilled” with Trump’s candidacy because it helped frame the debate as outsiders vs. insiders. He admitted he has given a “bear hug” to both Trump and Carson, saying his strategy was to “smother them with love.”

In Iowa, Rubio lambasted Cruz for criticizing Trump at a private fundraiser but not in public. We hear that Chuck Todd has scored a Sunday exclusive with Rubio on “Meet the Press.”

THE NEW NARRATIVE: Most social conservative leaders want to stop Trump, but they cannot agree on whether Cruz or Rubio is their best bet. “Evangelical voters, who are ... not easily led by their leaders, are all over the map in polls leading up to the primaries,” writes Post religion beat reporter Sarah Pulliam Bailey . “Many evangelical leaders are struggling to coalesce around one candidate who they believe could beat Trump. ... Interviews with several evangelical insiders this week suggest that leaders are debating whether to support Cruz or Rubio.” Yesterday, as expected, Iowa evangelical leader Bob Vander Plaats endorsed Cruz.

OPPOSITION BUILDS TO TRUMP’S MUSLIM PROPOSAL:

— An NBC/Wall Street Journal poll finds that just 57 percent of Americans oppose Trump’s “call for a total and complete shutdown for any Muslim being allowed to enter the United States.” The breakdown: 16 percent strongly favor, 9 percent somewhat favor, 11 percent somewhat oppose and 46 percent strongly oppose. Fewer than one in five don’t have an opinion.

Notably, the Frank Luntz focus group that led yesterday’s 202 revealed that many diehard Trump voters are okay with the ban because they believe it is only temporary. “Until our country’s representatives can figure out what is going on,” as Trump puts it. So when they hear “Trump wants to ban Muslims,” David Weigel flags , they think it’s a media lie.

The Post’s pollster, Scott Clement, analyzes the fresh numbers for 202 readers: “In the wording, no language such as ‘temporary’ or short-term was used, and that’s a legitimate criticism, even though one could also apply a term such as ‘indefinite’ and Trump himself used the terms ‘total and complete shutdown’ in his statement. It also doesn’t mention that Muslims who are U.S. citizens would be allowed to return, though these details were shifting after Trump’s initial statement and the poll (which began asking this question Tuesday) only had access to information at that point. It’s possible a ‘temporary’ ban would be somewhat more popular, but there’s no guarantee how much. Question wording matters a great deal when measuring support for new proposals in surveys, because many respondents are hearing a description of it for the first time (or a detailed description for the first time). In the coming days, it’s possible we’ll see a ranging level of support for Trump’s idea depending on question wording.”

— Trump is tapping into very palpable fear. Here are the six most important nuggets from the NYT/CBS national poll, the full results of which were released yesterday afternoon:

- “44% of Americans think another terrorist attack in the U.S. in the next few months is very likely, the highest percentage since right after the September 11, 2001 attacks. Overall, eight in 10 think another attack is at least somewhat likely.
- “For the first time since 2006, terrorism (14%) outranks the economy (12%) as the most important problem facing the country today.
- “Seven in 10 Americans think ISIS represents a major threat to the U.S. Just one in four thinks the fight against ISIS is going well.
- “Americans are divided over whether stricter gun laws will lead to less gun violence, while there is widespread and bipartisan support for better mental health screening.
- “Just 34% approve of President Obama’s handling of terrorism, marking a new record low. Overall his approval rating is 44%, while 48% disapprove.
- “In addition to his frontrunner status, 51% of Republican primary voters think Trump will eventually be the party’s nominee – far ahead of any other candidate.”

— THE DONALD CONTINUES TO DOMINATE THE CONVERSATION:

Trump pledged in New Hampshire last night that as president he would issue an executive order calling for the death penalty for anyone found guilty of killing a police officer. Trump was accepting the endorsement of the New England Police Benevolent Association. “Applause broke out, drowning out the Republican frontrunner,” Jenna Johnson reports from Portsmouth .

Evangelist Franklin Graham, Billy’s son, endorsed Trump’s approach and criticized Paul Ryan for saying that stopping Muslim immigration runs contrary to GOP values. “Politicians in Washington seem to be totally disconnected with reality,” Graham wrote in a Facebook post .

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar says Trump is helping out the terrorists. In a piece published by Time magazine, where he is a columnist, the former basketball star compares Trump to a lynch mob agitator, a “James Bond super-villain,” a schoolyard bully, a birthday party clown and the sinister “rough beast” from W.B. Yeats’s “The Second Coming.” Abdul-Jabbar, who is himself Muslim, declares that, “Trump is ISIS’s greatest triumph: the perfect Manchurian Candidate who, instead of offering specific and realistic policies, preys on the fears of the public, doing ISIS’s job for them.” (Niraj Chokshi)

Martin O'Malley will today visit the Adams Center mosque in Sterling, Va., the largest in the D.C. area, "to stand with the American Muslim community." The Democratic dark horse will have a press conference and then break bread with Muslim and other interfaith leaders. Homeland Security Secretary Jeh Johnson visited the same mosque on Monday.

A petition in the United Kingdom to ban Trump from entering the country has reached more than 475,000 signatures. (NBC News)

WAPO HIGHLIGHTS:

Army Sgt. Bowe Bergdahl, seen here before being captured by the Taliban, is the focus of the new season of the popular podcast. (U.S. Army via AP, file)

— “In new ‘Serial’ podcast, Bowe Bergdahl says he likened himself to Jason Bourne before capture,” by Dan Lamothe:” The focus of ‘Serial’ on the case promises to draw even more attention to Bergdahl, a controversial figure who faces military charges of desertion and misbehavior before the enemy. It also will offer even more fodder in a case that already was heavily politicized, with many Republicans angry that the Obama administration opted to recover the soldier in a swap in which five Taliban officials were released last year from the military prison at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba. ... The podcast also could exacerbate anger at Bergdahl among veterans and active-duty service members. The months-long search for him altered operations across eastern Afghanistan and put American lives in danger as the military raided villages looking for the missing soldier, according to U.S. officials and testimony in his case. Bergdahl’s legal status remains in question. Evidence in his case was reviewed by the Army in a two-day September hearing, but the service has been tight-lipped about its plans for him. He faces up to life in prison, although the officer who oversaw the hearing has recommended against both the most serious kind of court-martial and prison time, according to Bergdahl's lawyer, Eugene Fidell."

— “New style of training for police recruits emphasizes techniques to better de-escalate conflict situations,” by Kimberly Kindy in Burien, Wash.: “For the past three years, every police recruit in the state has undergone [a new] style of training at the Washington State Criminal Justice Training Commission, where officials are determined to produce ‘guardians of democracy’ who serve and protect instead of ‘warriors’ who conquer and control. Gone is the military-boot-camp atmosphere. Gone are the field exercises focused on using fists and weapons to batter suspects into submission. Gone, too, is a classroom poster that once warned recruits that ‘officers killed in the line of duty use less force than their peers.’ ... Training is at the heart of the national debate over police use of force. So far this year, police have shot and killed more than 900 people, according to a Washington Post database tracking such shootings — more than twice the number recorded in any previous year by federal officials. Anti-brutality activists and some law enforcement leaders argue that if police were better trained to de-escalate conflict, some of those people might still be alive.”

— “Spending negotiations stretch into next week,” by Kelsey Snell: “The Senate on Thursday passed a stop-gap bill that would give negotiators until the middle of next week to reach a deal on a year-end spending bill ... the House is expected to clear the legislation early on Friday, hours before funding for the government is set to run out.” The new deadline is Dec. 16: “Republicans want use the spending bill to roll back environmental regulations, repeal a decades old ban on crude oil exports and kill portions of the 2010 Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform bill. Democrats want to end tax breaks for oil and gas producers and permanently expand and extend tax breaks for low-income workers.”

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ, curated with Elise Viebeck:

— SIGNAL VISUAL: See how much Trump totally crowded out everything else this week. Signal Labs, our analytics partners, pulled the most retweeted tweets for the week related to Trump, Cruz, Clinton and Sanders. Four of the five top Clinton tweets came from the candidate’s own feed, while Trump is more likely to be tweeted about, and then have those tweets circulated by supporters and detractors alike.

GOOD READS FROM ELSEWHERE:

— Wall Street Journal, “Congress pushes for delay in ‘Cadillac tax’ on health plans,” by Stephanie Armour and Richard Rubin: “Congress is getting closer to delaying a tax on expensive employer-sponsored health plans, imperiling a levy that was a key revenue source and cost-control measure in the 2010 health law. Bipartisan support for killing or suspending the start of the so-called Cadillac tax, which is scheduled to take effect in 2018, is growing. ... Democrats had initially balked at supporting a repeal, because there is no consensus on replacing the estimated $91 billion it generates over 10 years. But more of them have rallied to support a delay because of pressure from businesses and unions, whose members often enjoy generous employer health plans that would be subject to the tax. Last week, the Senate voted 90-10 to repeal the 40% levy on employer benefit plans whose value exceeds a government-set threshold. The vote was on an amendment on a bill that is expected to be vetoed by Mr. Obama. But the margin was an indication of broad support for the repeal.”

— New York Times, “To help Jeb Bush connect, aides look to Mitt Romney’s missteps,” by Ashley Parker: “Early on in Jeb Bush’s campaign, his advisers, many of them veterans of the 2012 general election campaign, huddled to discuss a vexing concern: Mr. Bush had something of a Mitt Romney problem. The similarities between the two men were, and remain, unmistakable: Tall and lean. Well-bred sons of political dynasties. Diction harking back to a more genteel era. (‘Gosh, darn!’ Mr. Romney would exclaim; Mr. Bush chides supporters against sounding like ‘nervous Nellies.’) Both were personally likable policy aficionados who inspired tremendous loyalty from aides. But like Mr. Romney before him, Mr. Bush has showed difficulty connecting with many voters in a visceral way. ... In conversations months ago about Mr. Romney’s vulnerabilities and weaknesses, the Bush team tried to learn from Mr. Romney’s mistakes, according to aides, tweaking elements like press strategy and campaign style. When Mr. Romney ran in 2012, his strategists cast him as a repairman for the country’s floundering economy. But many voters never warmed up to Mitt Romney or came to believe that he cared about them.”

— Bloomberg, “Cruz faces a corn problem in Iowa,” by John McCormick: “In a state whose farm economy has become closely tied to ethanol, an alternative fuel made most commonly in the U.S. from corn, Cruz finds himself the target of attacks from a pro-ethanol group that happens to be led by the son of Iowa’s governor. Iowa, which hosts the first nominating contest with its Feb. 1 caucuses, is the nation’s top corn and ethanol producer. ‘Cruz is the most anti-ethanol, anti-renewable fuel, of all the candidates,’ Iowa Governor Terry Branstad said. ‘Conventional wisdom says he should win in Iowa, but his record is something that shows hypocrisy on this issue.’ ... America’s Renewable Future, the pro-ethanol group led by Branstad’s son, Eric, has made the senator from oil-rich Texas its Public Enemy No. 1. During the past week, the group has been running statewide a 60-second radio ad critical of Cruz. ... ‘If they are able to stop the Cruz momentum, that will show the real clout of the renewables,’ Branstad said.”

— The Harvard Institute of Politics released a national survey of 2,011 people between 18- and 29-years-old. Among respondents, 78 percent did not consider themselves “politically active,” and a plurality (36 percent) don’t follow national politics “very closely.” A whopping 81 percent think the country is either headed in the wrong direction or “don’t know” which direction we’re going. Young people are almost evenly divided about whether the American Dream is “alive” or “dead.” They are more likely to select a Democrat ballot in a primary or caucus election (32 to 25 percent for the GOP ballot). Young people who are Republicans picked Trump by 2 points over Carson in the GOP primary; but Democrats selected Bernie Sanders over Hillary Clinton by 6 points, 41 to 35 percent.

As you are well aware, seafood is becoming an increasingly talked-about topic of conversation not only among environmental advocacy groups, but also at the governmental level. I am a Minnesota-based researcher working on a project funded by the National Center for Food Protection and Defense. Our purpose is to learn not only how consumers make their purchasing decisions, but also how industry is viewing such subjects as seafood sustainability, local sourcing and labeling. The results will be utilized nationally to help guide fraud-avoidance best practices for the grocery, restaurant, processor and other industries working with fish and seafood.

I read with great interest the recommendations of the Presidential Task Force on combating illegal, unreported and unregulated fishing and seafood fraud that you were involved in preparing. Given your experience with the Task Force, I would consider it a great privilege to gain your observations on mislabeling and what can and should be done. I realize that the Task Force's findings are currently under review. My hope and intent is to simply gain your perspectives on them.

I will be in Washington, D.C. on March 18th. Would you be willing to spend even a brief amount of time with me on the above? If that date does not work, we could do by phone at your convenience.

Thank you in advance for your consideration. This is an important project and your thoughts would be most welcomed.

DC's only free, un-ticketed public event for the pope will demand that our leaders #FollowFrancis and take bold action for climate justice.

Join the Moral Action on Climate Justice Rally on Thursday, September 24, from 7:00 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. at the National Mall!

When Pope Francis speaks, the world listens. And, in this moment, his message could not be more critical.

#FollowFrancis and flood the National Mall on this historic occasion!

Unlike ticketed events during the pope's visit, ours is free and open to the public. No tickets are required.

At the rally, we'll broadcast the pope's speech to Congress on a massive jumbotron and after the speech, he'll come out of the Capitol and make an appearance directly to the crowd gathered on the Mall.

Please show up to support Pope Francis and push our elected leaders to take bold action for our climate. Together, we'll show the world that acting on climate change isn't just an economic and political issue—it's our moral imperative.

See you on September 24th!

I was too late in getting to our GC. He has an offer out to another candidate. If that person says no, he'll get in touch with you, but looks like the person is going to say yes, so not optimistic. Sorry.

Let me know what else you are looking at and whether I can be helpful.

Subject: Our message of change

John --

The Democratic convention starts today, and my new running mate Joe Biden and I recorded a message about what we all need to do next.

When we started this campaign, very few people thought we would make it this far.

But we put our faith in the power of ordinary supporters like you coming together and building a movement for change from the bottom up. And that's exactly why we're here.

I'd like you to watch this special message -- and I have a request.

We have our team, and this week the eyes of the entire country will be on our movement. Now is the time to take the next step and own a piece of this campaign.

Watch our video message and make a donation of \$5 or more today:

You joined this campaign because you're ready for real change in this country.

Over the next four days, the Democratic convention will define what change means and highlight our differences with John McCain to every voter who's tuning in.

We'll show the change we will be bringing the country on the economy, health care, energy, foreign policy, and the issues that affect all Americans.

But make no mistake about what we're up against. John McCain has embraced the same old politics of fear, division, and Karl Rove-style attacks -- which makes sense coming from someone who's voted with George Bush literally 95% of the time.

From the very beginning, this campaign has been in your hands. Now more than ever, we're counting on you to see it through.

Watch the video Joe and I recorded and make a donation of $5 or more now:

John. I've gotten to know Daniel Lubetzky over the last few years . My firm invested in his " not for profit only " business Kind Healthy Snacks . The company , headquartered in NYC , is phenomenally successful and Daniel is quite a phenom himself . Outside his business he has devoted a big portion of his life to bringing about a peaceful two state solution in the Mid East .

Daniel was born in Mexico , his Dad was a holocaust survivor . He started and funded PeaceWorks Foundation and it's flagship OneVoice Movement to help moderate Israelis and Arabs seize back the agenda for conflict resolution away from violent extremist . His advisory board members include Stu Eizenstat , Martin Indyk , Dennis Ross and other friends of ours . He ask me who was the most EFFECTIVE LEADER I knew in Washington . I said " In or out of office , hands down it is John Podesta " . He'd like to meet you some time . I think you'd find it most worthwhile and interesting to boot . No hurry , you've got lots on your plate . But when you have time , I recommend you spend a small amount of it with Daniel .
Best to you old friend . Erskine

Given the politics now w bipartisan support including Schumer, I'll support repeal w "sense of the Senate" that revenues would have to be found. I'd be open to a range of options to do that. But we have to be careful that the R version passes which begins the unraveling of the ACA.

On Sep 26, 2015, at 6:10 PM, Ann O'Leary <aoleary@hillaryclinton.com> wrote:

Madam Secretary -

I wanted to be sure you saw this memo on the Cadillac Tax.

In short, we are recommending that you call for repeal but go back to your 2008 position that workers over $250K not be exempt from paying taxes on their health care. This will allow us to take in some revenue and show a consistency of your position without harming middle class workers. It would do little, however, to control health care consumption and costs.

There remains a divide among your advisors with the economic team interested in you offering a "fix it" approach (Option 3) in the memo and your political team very interested in you coming out for full repeal because of the union implications (Option 1). Several of your advisors - Neera and Chris, chief among them - offered this middle ground that Jake and I thought could work (Option 2).

Subsequently, I've talked to Randi Weingarten who has been taking the pulse of the unions in it. While she thinks they can live with the $250K position, she thinks you don't gain much from it and feels the most important thing is that you get out there not only offering empathy for workers and the cost-shifting they are experiencing but you make clear that this tax would mean health savings on the backs of workers and you won't do it that way.

If you did come out for repeal, we would recommend coupling it with strong delivery system reforms and making clear that Congress find a way to pay for it (we don't recommend having you offer the pay-for since they are actively working on it in the Senate).

Because you are going on Meet the Press tomorrow, we wanted to check in on whether you wanted to make your position clear on the show. Comms team feels that only straight up repeal would make news.

Jake and John can weigh in further and we are happy to discuss.

Thanks,
Ann

Dear Members of the Board,

As you may know, each year the University of Pennsylvania's Think Tanks and Civil Societies Program issues its annual "Global Go To Think Tank Index," including rankings of think tanks on a number of fronts. Though this ranking system has significant flaws, I wanted to update you on where CAP stands.

The results were just released and I'm proud to say that CAP is currently ranked 19th in the "Top Think Tanks Worldwide (US & Non-US)" category. We moved up six spots this year, and eleven spots over the last two years. We rank 9th in the "Top Think Tanks in the United States" category, up one spot from last year. We are also the youngest institution in the top 10. For context on how far we've come over the years, in 2008 – the first year in which the report mirrored its present format – CAP ranked 17th among US think tanks.

Two other noticeable areas of improvement are our jumps to 1st place from 9th in the "Best Use of Social Networks" category and to 7th from 11th for "Think Tanks with the Best Use of Media." Our policy rankings also stayed strong, placing us 8th for domestic economic policy, 7th for health policy, 7th for social policy and 8th for innovate policy ideas/proposals. In some areas, we have room to grow, including defense and national security where we rank 25th, and foreign policy and international affairs, where we landed 16th; it's a sign of the oddity of the rankings that there's a substantial gap between these two rankings. It's also worth noting that the media and policy categories are ranked against the global competition, not just US-based think tanks.

While I believe these rankings are imperfectly derived, I wanted to share them because the rankings are shared widely.

You can read the full report here if you are interested.

Thank you as always for all that you do for CAP.

Best wishes,

Neera

On behalf of NEA President Dennis Van Roekel, we would like to request a meeting with you to discuss the future appointment of a Secretary of Education. NEA and our 3.2 million members believe that we have our best opportunity to have a partnership with government to transform America’s Public Schools. This position is critical to that partnership. John Stocks has been trying to reach you and if a meeting is not feasible with you, a conversation with John would be fine with us. We are not sure what your timeline may be. Thanks for all you do. Hi John: A couple quick things. I'll miss you tonight. Juliet and I were invited to the state dinner for Trudeau. Pretty exciting.

Second, the Track II started this morning with Kiran expressing disappointment that they haven't accomplished much yet. She has a point. Nonetheless, I started the Paris discussion saying that I thought they had played a big role in helping us to create the kind of relationships that were needed to get a deal done in Paris. I made sure Todd, Caroline, and Brian spent time with a lot of them to get their sense on what India needed to say yes to Paris. Just thought that message might be useful for you tonight.

- moving jims filming to NY.

- moving forward with SEIU in ny next week or Chicago on the 20th but engaging with them today and moving forward.

- keeping the 4 finance events for nyc next week as is.

- confirming Iowa for the 18th and 19th and Chicago for the 20th for message and finance.

- last point is that if SEIU does not work for NYC, we need something else open press or message or we have a dead week.

I saw Ginny at Don Edwards Memorial service. Lots of anti death penalty stuff going on there. Stephen Bright focused not on 94 crime bill but 96 antiterrorism and death penalty bill which he said gutted habeus. We should probably discuss tomorrow if you are around.

HARRISBURG -- Lt. Gov. Catherine Baker Knoll, the first woman to become lieutenant governor in Pennsylvania, died tonight at 6 p.m. after battling neuroendocrine cancer.

Knoll, 78, of McKees Rocks will be replaced by Senate President Pro Tempore Joe Scarnati, R-Jefferson County.

"I extend heart-felt sympathy to Catherine's family," said Gov. Ed Rendell. "Today we mourn the passing of one of the strongest, most dedicated public servants in Pennsylvania's history. Our thoughts and prayers are with Catherine's family. She will be deeply missed. READ MORE HERE

When I'm out there talking to voters, we talk about what we've done, what we plan to do over the next four years, and why the other guys have dangerous plans to go back to the policies that failed America for almost a decade.

But there is another question that keeps coming up, and you need to know about it: "Why do I see so many more ads for the other guys?"

You don't need me to tell you that the Romney campaign is outraising us -- that billionaire ideologues and corporate interests are piling on tens of millions more in negative ads trashing us, and that all of it means that undecided voters in battleground states like Iowa could be seeing false, misleading, negative attacks at a rate almost twice as often as they hear from us.

Last week, when I was in Iowa, voters told me they were feeling it. The numbers back it up: Our side is getting outspent 2-to-1 on the air there.

But the folks asking me about this don't want an explanation -- they want to know what I'm going to do about it.

And the fact is that solving this problem is up to you.

Close the gap on the air by making a donation of \$5 or more now.

You're getting this email because you know what the stakes are in this election. You know the facts about what we've done to prevent a deeper crisis and to start building an economy that works for the middle class.

But for someone who's not as engaged, these ads may be an important and possibly even primary source of information about the choice in this election.

So it's a bad situation if 90 percent of them are false, negative attacks on us.

We're losing this air war right now.

I don't have as much time to campaign this time as I did in 2008, so this whole thing is riding on you making it happen.

Subject: LCV for Obama, iPhone for You

Dear John,

I have two exciting announcements—one for every American who cares about our environment and one for you personally.

Today the League of Conservation Voters enthusiastically endorses Barack Obama for President. From this day forward, we will make it a top priority to help him win the White House and bring the change we need.

Obama stands for environmental progress. He is the best candidate to lead our nation to a clean energy future and to reduce the power of Big Oil and Dirty Coal. He will be a true leader in solving the global energy crisis.

How do you sum up the countless reasons to support Obama in just a few words? That's where you come in.

Suggest a snappy slogan for LCV's Barack Obama for President campaign and this iPhone could be yours!

We'll put the winning slogan on a car magnet, so that Americans can see that Barack Obama is the best environmental choice for president in 2008. He is the candidate who will provide new "green" jobs and better, cleaner energy options that will give American consumers real choices.

The contrast with John McCain is stark. Obama's lifetime LCV score is 86%, to McCain's 24%. On issue after issue—from renewable energy standards to fuel efficiency and oil subsidies—Sen. Obama supports a clean environment, while Sen. McCain sides with the big polluters.

Barack Obama is the only candidate who will change Washington by reducing the power of special interests like Big Oil and Dirty Coal that have had a stranglehold on Congress for far too long.

Help us make the case to American voters that Obama will bring real environmental leadership and the change we need in Washington!

Send us your idea for a campaign slogan and enter the contest to win an iPhone.

Thank you for all that you do. I look forward to your support and partnership throughout the 2008 campaign.

Sincerely,

Gene Karpinski
League of Conservation Voters

P.S. Don't keep this a secret—forward to your friends so they can enter the contest as well!

Enter our contest and help us elect Obama for President. You could win an iPhone!

Sen. Barack Obama is our candidate—because it's time to turn the page and start building a clean energy future.

Here is what we have: Huffington post is doing a story tomorrow "fact checking" the idea that there was a push for a constitutional amendment in 1996, as HRC claimed was true. The piece will essentially say there was not, and will quote Rosen's tweet and Evan Wolfson saying this was not true and was hardly a basis for DOMA to be signed by WJC.

Xochitl has also gotten an inquiry from the Blade.

In addition to this, Socarides tells us he heard from NYT on this, though the campaign has not, so we do not know what he is referring to. I would not be surprised, however, if activists we're pitching this.

All that said, I do not think a statement from HRC is warranted simply based on these inquiries. Indeed, I think a statement from her likely attracts more coverage than just these inquiries and also could give the appearance that we are responding to Bernie at JJ, rather than clarifying our own remarks to Maddow. I missed the beginning of the conf call this afternoon on this, but I had assumed we were preparing an HRC statement less for HuffPo and more because that is what political thought was needed to quell the LGBT backlash.

If that is not the case, then for my purposes, I would just propose a spokesman statement that accounts for Dan's point (that she will not disavow her theory about the constitutional amendment) but also addresses the community's outrage over the idea that we might be trying to justify support for the law in 96 by saying something like, "Regardless of the differing motives that led to the passage of DOMA, none were justifiable since, as both Hillary and President Clinton have said, the law was clearly discriminatory."

I'm not sure anyone has asked. We would put it out there.

On Friday, and in many instances previously, I was asked about my position on the Defense of Marriage Act (DOMA). I appreciate that people have differing views of the DOMA situation [other word?] in 1996. The environment for gays and lesbians was different then and there were struggles about the best paths to take. That is common in all social change movements. I have been very open that my own views have evolved over the years.

I hope the important thing is that we are now moving forward toward justice, together. In 2013, I added my voice in support of marriage equality "personally and as a matter of policy and law." As I said then, LGBT Americans are full and equal citizens and they deserve the full and equal rights of citizenship. Like so many others, my personal views have been shaped over time by people I have known and loved, by my experience representing our nation on the world stage, my devotion to law and human rights, and the guiding principles of my faith. That's why, as a Senator, I pushed for laws that would extend protections to the LGBT community in the workplace and that would make violence towards LGBT individuals a hate crime. And as Secretary of State, I put LGBT rights on the global agenda and told the world that "gay rights are human rights and human rights are gay rights." In my speech last night in Iowa, I didn't look back to the America of the past, I looked forward to the America we need to build together. I pledged to fight for LGBT Americans who, despite all our progress, in many places can still get married on Saturday and fired on Monday just because of who they are and who they love. In this campaign and as President, I will keep fighting for equality and opportunity for every American.

I originally flagged HRC's Maddow remarks as potentially problematic in part because her wording closely linked her to two unfavorable policies of the past even as no one in the community was asking her to "own" them. Given that, my recommendation would be to make this statement about just her, her evolution, and her record -- not bring in WJC.

Relatedly, if we release a statement tonight, it will very clearly be in response to the Maddow interview. To the extent we can, I advocate for owning that so that we can clean this up completely, rightly position her as a champion of LGBT issues, and make sure we move on from any discussion of looming amendments or her being involved in passing either DADT or DOMA. Without getting into the weeds, can we say that the broader point is that the country is in a different place now on LGBT issues -- and thank goodness it is -- and that she's so happy each policy has been placed in the dustbin of history?

Last thought: I have raised this a few times to a smaller number of people on this thread but will flag this for the larger group as well. At Keene State College, she specifically cited friends playing a part in her evolution, which we echo here. That's fine, IMO, and quite believable. But if I were a reporter and wanted to keep the evolution story alive, I would start asking which friends she was talking to and ask us to provide them. Not a problem per se, but I think it is worth flagging now so we aren't caught by surprise later.

The larger point I was trying to make about DOMA, however, is still true. It was neither proposed nor supported by anyone in the Clinton administration at the time. It was an effort by the Republicans in Congress to distract attention from the real issues facing the country by using gay marriage, which had very little support then, as a wedge issue in the election. The legislation passed by overwhelming veto-proof margins in both houses of Congress and President Clinton signed it with serious reservations he expressed at the time. Luckily the country has evolved way beyond this in the last 20 years and most Americans, including the Supreme Court, now embrace LGBT equality. We are a better country for it. Although there is much work that remains, and I'm eager to help advance the day when we are all truly equal.

Bill Clinton: It's time to overturn DOMA

The writer is the 42nd president of the United States.

In 1996, I signed the Defense of Marriage Act. Although that was only 17 years ago, it was a very different time. In no state in the union was same-sex marriage recognized, much less available as a legal right, but some were moving in that direction. Washington, as a result, was swirling with all manner of possible responses, some quite draconian. As a bipartisan group of former senators stated in their March 1 amicus brief to the Supreme Court, many supporters of the bill known as DOMA believed that its passage "would defuse a movement to enact a constitutional amendment banning gay marriage, which would have ended the debate for a generation or more." It was under these circumstances that DOMA came to my desk, opposed by only 81 of the 535 members of Congress.

On March 27, DOMA will come before the Supreme Court, and the justices must decide whether it is consistent with the principles of a nation that honors freedom, equality and justice above all, and is therefore constitutional. As the president who signed the act into law, I have come to believe that DOMA is contrary to those principles and, in fact, incompatible with our Constitution.

Because Section 3 of the act defines marriage as being between a man and a woman, same-sex couples who are legally married in nine states and the District of Columbia are denied the benefits of more than a thousand federal statutes and programs available to other married couples. Among other things, these couples cannot file their taxes jointly, take unpaid leave to care for a sick or injured spouse or receive equal family health and pension benefits as federal civilian employees. Yet they pay taxes, contribute to their communities and, like all couples, aspire to live in committed, loving relationships, recognized and respected by our laws.

When I signed the bill, I included a statement with the admonition that “enactment of this legislation should not, despite the fierce and at times divisive rhetoric surrounding it, be understood to provide an excuse for discrimination.” Reading those words today, I know now that, even worse than providing an excuse for discrimination, the law is itself discriminatory. It should be overturned.
